

Arithmetic.—The general result in arithmetic was good. Only four scholars out of thirty-nine failed to present satisfactory papers.

Algebra.—The results in this subject were excellent, no paper falling below the "satisfactory" level.

Euclid.—The propositions were very well prepared, and the deductions were attacked with commendable success.

Botany.—Thirty-nine pupils were subjected to an oral examination in botany; and there was ample proof that this subject had been treated in the right way.

Book-keeping, physics, and physiology were also taught.
