EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE GORE HIGH SCHOOL.

Notwithstanding the serious drawbacks under which the evening classes were held, the 1913 session was distinctly successful. In all fifty-six individual students enrolled, twenty-four of whom were free pupils, while the other thirty-two paid fees. Twenty-four students took four classes, two took two classes, and the remaining twenty-six took one class only. In almost all cases the instructors were drawn from the staff of the local High School. The Southland Education Board's woodwork instructor for the Gore centre conducted a class in carpentry, the instructor for wood-carving travelled from Invercargill each week, and a local dressmaker took charge of the dress-making class. Classes for the following subjects were held during the session, each for two hours weekly: English, arithmetic, shorthand, book-keeping, dressmaking, carpentry, wood-carving, and electricity. Just about the time when the classes should have started, Gore was visited by a disastrous flood. For weeks after no light was available, and therefore the session was late in commencing. So great was the disorganization in the homes and business places caused by the flood, and so wretched were the roads, that the enrolment of students suffered seriously. The number of ladies enrolled was especially small. Still, the number of students taking several
