NOTE.—In Featherston Camp 4 deaths from cerebro-spinal meningitis are included in the 165 deaths from influenza infection; in Trentham Camp 5 deaths from cerebro-spinal meningitis are included in the 73 deaths from influenza infection.

It will be seen that there were only 2 deaths by suicide, as compared with 8 in 1917, 3 in 1916, and 4 in 1915.

Sickness.

Owing to difference in classification of the returns, comparative figures for the incidence rate of illness in the four camps are not accurate. For the first two quarters of the year the admission-rate to hospital at Featherston was below that of 1917. In the third quarter it rose from 4.2 per thousand average strength to 14.4 per thousand. This was due to the first wave of influenza. In the fourth quarter it rose to 58.4 per thousand, a result of the second wave.

At Trentham the rate was slightly higher throughout the first two quarters than in 1917. In the third quarter it rose to 36.5 per thousand, due to a very widespread first wave of influenza. In the fourth quarter it rose to 70.5 per thousand, due to the November second wave of influenza.

At Awapuni and Narrow Neck the sickness-rate in the last two quarters is similarly increased.

Infectious Disease.

In the following table is shown the incidence of various forms of infectious disease among men attached to the four camps in 1918 as compared with 1917:—
