

The gift of Whakapuaka to him (Wi Katene) was the basis of his rights to the Nelson District. If he had remained at Parapara he would have no rights to the land extending to the Waimea. But as he had acquired Whakapuaka and the land to the south of it was lying vacant on to the Waimea he gained a right to that locality as well. If land was given to another within fixed boundaries, the person to whom it was given would not be entitled to the part beyond.
