A TRUE STORY.

MAR WHO CAME THE BACK.

***********

Arnold Galloway was soon forgotten by the world. A great deal of interest had been taken in him when he had stood his trial on a charge of forgery, Galloway was a member of fashionable society with a distinguished diplomatic career to his credit.

Those who had known him did not believe it possible for a man of his proud position to be guilty of the despicable crime of forgery, but their trust had received a rude shock when he had entered the dock and pleaded guilty to the charge.

After he had received his sentence of five years' penal servitude he had marched from the dock without a tremor, and when he had vanished down the stairway to the cells below he disappeared from the memory of all who had been pleased to call him friend-all save one!

That single exception was a woman, and from her memory he never vanished, for she could not forget that one sweet night when he had taken her into his strong arms and her heart had beat against his breast as he told her how much he loved her.

Even in face of his confession it was hard for her to believe that a man like Arnold Galloway could be guilty of a mean fraud. Yet his open acknowledgement of guilt should have shattered her faith in him, despite the dictates of her heart.

From the first he announced his readiness to take his punishment, and so, after the briefest of trials, Galloway went to prison to pay the penalty of a paltry crime.

Nearly five years had passed since then, and it was now a night of celebration at Parkmead House. The occasion was the twenty-fourth anniversary of the birthday of Hazel Loraine, the girl who had wept for the man in his lonely prison, and whose heart was still heavy with sorrow.

The ball was at its height as a figure strangely out of keeping with the gorgeous spectacle within the great house crept across the grounds in the rear of the brilliantly lighted building.

The figure was clad in the ragged remnants of a suit that hung loosely upon his spare form. The light from one of the windows fell upon his face as he moved stealthily and silently towards the palm conservatory.

The face was pale and drawn, and, even had it been seen by any of the gay throng within the house, few would have guessed the indentity of its owner. For this thin broken wreck of humanity was in strong contrast to the Arnold Galloway who had gone out of the world's ken five years

He had come back a gaunt and pitiable shadow of his former self.

He moved stealthily as he gripped in his hand something that was in strange contrast to the rest of him. It was a bouquet of roses, and he held it as though it was to him the most precious thing on

The bouquet had cost him eight shillings of the last half-sovereign of the money which had been given to him on his discharge from prison. But he had spent the money cheerfully enough, for this was to be the last birthday offering he would make to Hazel Loraine.

He had remembered that it was her birthday, and he had bought her the | flowers which he knew she loved best, He meant to make his gift secretly and steal away unseen. He was going to creep into the conservatory when the way was clear and place the flowers where he knew she would find them. A short note was attached to the bouquet:

"My last prayer will be for your happi-

That was all, and the message was unsigned.

Reaching the conservatry, he prered cautiously in. There was nobody inside, and the door was slightly ajar. He pushed it open and stepped inside, crossed the tiled flooring to the palm bower.

It was Hazel's favourite seat, the seat in which she had been sitting on that never-to-be-forgotten night when she had whispered back the soft words which had | name. told him that her heart was his.

As he reached the bower the sound of approaching voices came to him, and his jaw tightened grimly. Somebody was coming to the conservatory, and escape by the way he had come was cut off. To reach the door he would have to pass in front of that through which the newcomers were entering the conservatory, thus revealing himself in all his raggedness and shame.

There was only one thing to be done. He must hide until the coast was clear again, and, knowing the place well, he darted across to a thick cluster of palms which he knew would afford him shelter.

He had no sooner screened himself from view than two people entered, a girl and a man.

The one was Hazel Loraine, and the other Raymond Thorne, a man whom Galloway had known well before he had lost his place amongst men. The pair sat down, and a hungry, yearning look came into the cold grey eyes of Arnold Galloway as he gazed upon the face which had been before him constantly in his dreams during the past hopeless years.

Raymond Thorne leaned forward on his seat and looked into the sad face of the girl by his side.

"You know what I am going to say, Hazel," began the man, "for I have said it to you so many times. You know, dear it was your father's wish and my fondest hope that you would become my wife. Can't you care for me just a little, Hazel?"

The girl sighed hopelessly.

"I shall never love any man again," she answered, "for I gave my heart years ago to a man whom I believed to be the best and noblest man in all the world."

"And he proved himself worthless!" exclaimed Thorne. "You cannot even think of him now without shame. Besides, he has gone out of your life, and even if he came back you could never forget what he is."

"I think of him only as he was," replied the girl with a flush. "He was both true and honest once.'

"But, Hazel, you cannot go on like this, wasting your young life upon a memory. Besides, dear, there is your father to consider; he wants you to take your proper place in the world to which you belong.'

Hazel Loraine spoke again, and her voice was tired and weary in its tone,

"I know that it is my father's wish that I should marry you, Raymond, and I am anxious to do all I can to carry out his wishes. I will become your wife, but I will tell you now, as I have told you before, that I shall never be able to blot out from my heart the memory of the love which I once knew.'

The man took her hand greedily and drew her towards him. At the same moment the man watching from behind the palms, weak from lack of food and a fruitless search for work, was almost vercome by the emotions within him. He swayed slightly, and, in endeavouring to recover himself, stumb-

Thorne and the girl turned sharply at the sound, and, realising that discovery was now inevitable, Arnold Galloway stepped out from his hiding-place and stood revealed, his drawn face twitching convulsively. His grasp upon the bouquet relaxed, and the roses fell to the floor at his feet.

Hazel Loraine cried out at the sight of

"Arnold!" she cried hoarsely, and she moved impulsively towards him.

Raymond Thorne's oyes flashed dangerously and he bit his lip. Then he, too, advanced until he stood between the girl and the man from prison.

"Are you lost to all shame, Galloway?" he demanded hotly. "Have you not brought enough sorrow and disgrace upon this house without returning to awaken the memory of your perfidy?

Something of his old spirit flashed in the eyes of the outcast, but he checked himself and his head drooped forward.

"I did not intend to be seen," he answered brokenly. "I came because I could not help it-because I could not help remembering the date."

"Arnold!" Again the girl broathed his The ex-convict, motionless as a statue, stood regarding her with an expression of hopeless yearning in his eyes. Then with an effort he turned away, and moved towards the glass door leading to turned into the library.

"You are right, Thorne," he said quietly, "I should not have come back I tered, am an outcast amongst men, a branded criminal, not fit to mix with decent people. I make no excuse for what has passed but I am sorry that I was weak enough to come into her life again. But it shall not be repeated, for to-night the world shall know of me for the last time."

Hazel Loraine looked up instantly, and there was an expression of horror and apprehension in her beautiful face.

"What do you mean?" she demanded. "Where are you going?"

Arnold Galloway shrugged his spare shoulders. "Back to my place on the Embankment," he answered bitterly. after night I have sat there, trying to pluck up courage. To-night I do not think I shall find it so difficult."

The girl cried out again and rushed towards him, but Thorne held her back. The next moment Galloway was gone.

П.

Stunned by the happenings of the last few minutes, Hazel Loraine was incapable of making the effort which was required in order to free herself from Thorne's hold. Indeed, her senses were reeling, and she seemed on the point of swooning, until the cool draught coming in through the still open door revived her.

She pressed Raymond Thorne away from her, and stood for a moment motionless, tortured by her thoughts. And then her eyes fell upon the bouquet of roses lying upon the ground a few feet away.

A little cry broke from her throat as she moved suddenly towards the flowers.

But Thorne was too quick for her, and, anticipating her intentions, he snatched them up, before she could reach them.

"It is not fit that you should soil your hands by touching the offering of a creature so debased," he said; and twisting the flowers in his two hands, he flung the broken petals to the ground.

The slim figure of Hazel Loraine straightened to the full extent of its height, and her eyes flashed withering

"How dare you!" she cried, in a tense voice. The man fell back before the bitter contempt in her tone. Hazel bent down, and picking up one of the crushed blooms pressed it to her breast. The man did not trust himself

The oppressive silence which followed was broken by the girl.

"I wish you to forget the promise which I made to you a short time ago, Mr Thorne," she said, speaking slowly. "I told you then that I could never love you I know now that I could not even tolerate you. Your presence is loathsome to me, and I hope you will spare me the pain of seeing you again." Without another word she turned and left him.

She made her way back towards the hall-room, but reaching the great hall leading up to it, she came upon one of the servants hurrying in her direction.

"There is a policeman waiting in the library, and he wishes to speak to you at once, miss," the manservant told her. 'The master was called to Downing street a quarter of an hour ago, or I should have gone to him."

"Thank you, Evans," was all the girl said; and passing down the hall she

"I have come from the Metropole Hospital, where I have left your broken Keith Loraine," went on the man, has had an accident, and his conti is very serious."

The girl drew a deep breath.

"Why-what-what has happen she stammered, for she knew some of her brother's wild ways, and she half afraid to hear the truth.

"It happened an hour ago," the intor informed her. "A wounder sold walking on crutches, slipped and fell front of a cab in Piccadilly Circus Yo brother saved his life, but I fear that will pay a big price for his noble The doctor does not think he will i another hour, and the youngster is perately anxious to see you."

Only Hazel knew the effect of this upon her already bruised heart. But she was a woman, and the sorrow which she left a her brother's possible end temperal by the pride which thrilled her at the reason for it. "I will come with you immediately," she said.

Some, in pass glance down hopelessly at the dark when below, and a few among them seek is the rest which they cannot find on a This dismal promenade has been named "Misery March."

Arnold Galloway was among the la less ones that night, and he was is the few who thought to find pear forgetfulness in the bosom of the river.

A few yards east of Waterloo B he came upon a creature even months spairing than he felt. It was a wo and she was leaning upon the pa gazing down upon the river as it sullenly against the Embankment #

Galloway knew the sign; he knew despair had beaten her and that a moment she would fling herself or the rising tide. He walked up to and as she turned towards him, the of the street lamp fell upon her put still protty face. "What's the matter die?" he asked her gently, for only a youngster, and her expression pitful in its misery.

She looked up at him, and h moved, but she did not speak.

"The world has been hard will he said kindly. "It is so with mell you are young, and life must hold hope for you, however black the may seem.'

Laugh where we must, be candid wherewe can .- Pope.

DE MORTUIS ----

In pensive mood I wandered, at the dewy close of day, Through the silent, solemn graveyard, and at every turn I read, Inscribed on snowy marble, or engraved in granite gray, The many, many, virtues of the underlying dead. Their lives had been perfection, full of grace and piety, And every one was certain of his mansion in the skies;

But since I read those epitaphs, the thing that puzzles me,

Is where in earth they hide the bally sinner when he dies?

The scentific world is quite fluttered just now over certain mysterious etheric vibrations or pulsations that have butted in, as it were, on our own wireless system, and which, for want of a better explanation are surmised by some to be fragments of messages from Mars or some other planet, which is trying to send us a civil greeting. Some very much in earnest in their relief, and Signor Marconi has announced his intention of investigating the matter as thoroughly as possible, and perhaps attempt a reply to the seeming signals. There is something very fascinating in the idea that we may yet annihilate the millions of leagues separating us from our planetary neighbours, and daily exchange political news and views, market reports and racing tips with them: It may be that the Martian or Venusian (is that the right word?) would be able to give us some valuable hints on our electrification scheme, and it would be interesting to get their unbiassed opinions of President Wilson or Mr Massey. But there are dangers, too, in breaking down the barrier of space. The "splendid isolation" that we have enjoyed in the past would be lost to us, and we do not know what kind of neighbours we would get. They might prove of that class who indecently ignore our claims to privacy, who practise the cornet at midnight, and who are always borrowing our garden tools. It were well to be carofull; it is much easier to make undesirable acquaintance than to break it off.

School teachers, for the most part, wear, like Cassins, "a lean and hungry look." This curious physiological fact is rather perplexing-until one reads the printed schedules of teaching salaries. There lies the explanation. Few men could wax fat, like Jeshurum, on the miserable nittance of the average pedagogue. Our persistent policy of parsimony in matters educational is difficult to understand, in the face of our professional concern for the 'upl fit of the race." The elevating process-which is growing more strenuous every generation—is largely assigned to the schoolmaster, and he is expected to be equal to it. The day of Goldsmith's pedagogue, who "could write and cipher too," is over; we ask now for Admirable Crichtons as the teachers of our children. They must have brains, their knowledge must be cyclopaedic; they must be athletics, botanists, gymnasts, singing masters, and what not; and we expect in them understanding, tact, patience, sympathy and quite a host of other virtues to make up a character that will leave its healthy impression on our boys and girls And for these qualities and attainments we offer a "screw" that if offered to a scavenger would provoke him to assault his loans, therefore, was £810. and batter us. Small wonder that, as one ex-teacher sweepingly declared, "No man willingly stays in the service one day wishing to build precisely the same type after he discovers that he has brains And so the "uplift" drags.

Time was when we regarded the man granted £350 for the purpose. in khaki as a hero. We told him so in a thousand ways and places. We also said that we would never, never forget cannot be granted more than the maximum him, and to prove our bona fides we set amount provided for that purpose, which, about raising funds for his later benefit as said, is £750. Yet, should be make apincidentally getting a lot of fun for our- plication for a loan to purchase land and selves in the process. But we have wishing to build should apply for a loan to see that the fellows who fought for us are not the heroes we mistakenly supposed them to be, but are, rather, something like cadgers, or worse. To the Southland War Funds Association must be given the credit of first making the discovery. For some time past a number of soldier-invalids in the hospitals and elsewhere have been in receipt of a monthly dole of tobacco, the cost being met out of the funds subscribed by the public in its days of funk and enthusiasm. The monthly bill was not very startling in its amount; but it would seem that some of the soldiers had badly hurt as a result of foolishness in stopping bullets etc., in Flanders and other places, and have remained too long on this tobacco pension list. Anyhow, the War Funds Association, in a most commendable spirit of bumbledom, decided to "cut it out." And "cut it out" they did, with no other explanation, so far as the public knows, than that given by one of the members that the sick soldiers were "coming it a bit too strong." But then. no other explanation should, or could have been expected from such a body.

One can hardly pick up a paper nowadays without reading that so-and-so, "a returned soldier," has been convicted of some offence or other. What useful purpose is served by mention of the fact that a particular transgressor is a returned soldier is not very clear, while much harm may be wrought thereby. Probably the returned soldiers yield no greater proportion of malefactors and misdemeanants than any other class of the community, though, their numbers being so great, it might seem so. But the persistence with which our papers record the fact that the aforesaid So-and-so is a returned soldier will certainly spread the impression that our R.S.'s are an exceptionally tough lot, and that it would be well to take in the washing while any of them are about. It were well that the R.S.A. did a litle kicking against this unfair treatment of them. as a body, by the press. But perhaps such publicity is necessary in the interests of something or other. If so, let us impartially carry the practice further, and when John Niblick is convicted of bigamy, mention that he is a member of the Invercargill Golf Club, or when Thomas Stiggins forfeits the amount of his bail for drunkenness, inform the public that he is a teacher in St. Jeremiah's Sunday School. Sauce for the goose is also good for the gander.

THE DISCHARGED SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT.

ANOTHER ANOMALY

Another anomaly, this time in connection with the D.S.S. Act, has been pointed out by a correspondent, who remarks that it is possible, by applying for one loan for the purpose of purchasing a section and erecting a house, to obtain a greater sum than is granted if loans are separately applied for, (1) for purchase of a section, and (2) for the erection of a residence.

The correspondent, it seems, applied for a loan for the purchase of a section, and was granted it—an amount of £60. Then he applied for a loan to erect a dwelling and fence, and was granted the maximum amount of £750. The total of

Later, he discovered that his neighbour, applying under the same Act, and of house: asked in the first instance for one loan to cover both the cost of section and the erection of a house. He was

The position is that a man applying for a loan for the erection of a dwelling

SAY, Sam! Do you believe this? It's a fact. There are eight great plants covering 250 acres, employing 12,000 men, working ceaselessly to produce Maxwell's, and the result is there are over 300,000 of these cars running on the read to-day. In 1914 there was one Maxwell in every 1000 cars. In 1915 there was one in every 500. In 1916 one in every 48. In 1919 there was one Maxwell in every 16 cars. Well, Bill, I'll just slip round and get a Maxwell now while they are £465, because I hear they will be over £500 shortly, and if all you say is true they are well worth it.

THE MAN WHO CAME BACK.

tion when money is no object to me. Please take it."

The girl did not understand the bitter irony in his tone, nor the covert meaning in his words, and she took the money

"Heaven reward you!" she sobbed. "I believe that this is an omen for good-I believe that you have saved my life."
"I hope so kiddie," he murmured brightly. "Goodnight-and better luck." Then he passed on his way, whilst the girl turned away from the water and crossed the road.

Twenty yards farther along, Arnold Galloway stopped against the parapet, and looked out over the dark river.

"I'm not afraid to live," he muttered grimly, "but I'm sure that it's better that 1 should not. The misery of my own life I can stand, but I do not wish to awaken in her heart the memory of my shame. I'm only a worthless outcastand nobody cares."

"Arnold!"

His name whispered from somewhere behind him caused him to turn. He saw a motor-car pulling up at the kerb; he saw a girl wrapped in an evening cloak stepping on to the pavement before the car had stopped.

"Hazel!" he gasped, and then drew back.

"Arnold!" murmured the girl, coming forward and holding out her arms to him. "Arnold, won't you come to me-I want you, dear?"

The man stood before her, and drew his ragged sleeve across his eyes.

"You-you should not have come, Hazel." he said brokenly.

"I had to come, Arnold dear," she answered, "because I know how splendid you are and because life can never be anything to me without you."

The man still held back.

"You mustn't-mustn't speak like that." he said hoarsely. "Think-think what I am."

"It is because I do know what you are that I am here to-night," she answered, looking into his wan face. "I knew now what my heart has always believed," she added, "that you are the noblest, the truest man in all the world. I know, too, Arnold, that if I devote every hour of my life to you, I can never prove myself worthy of your great love, nor repay you for your terrible sacrifice."

Arnold Galloway tried to speak, but could not.

"I have just left the bedside of my brother, Keith," went on the giri. "He is dead, and he died in saving a man who was not able to save himself. But before he died he told me everything. I know that it was he, and not you, who was guilty of the crime for which you suffered. I know that you took the blame upon your shoulders to save me the pain of knowing his shame. Dad knows too, for he was at the hospital, and he will be waiting for us at home.'

A great sob convulsed the man's frame, as the woman took his wan face between her hands and drew it towards her.

"Come, Arnold dear," she murmured softly. "Come and give me the chance of showing you my gratitude."

Slowly they moved towards the waiting car, and as they reached it, Hazel Loraine glanced up at the chauffeur.

"Home!" she said. And there was a tone of gladness in her voice which no one had heard for five long, weary years. The End.

CLUTHA VALLEY RAILWAY.

At a meeting of the Clutha Valley Railway League held in the Greenfield Hall on Saturday, April 10th, there was a representative attendance of delegates from the districts interested.

An animated discussion took place on the question of routes, the Hillend and Clydevale delegates being oppesed to the Tuapeka Mouth representatives, who 'stuck out' for the original surveyed route from Balclutha to Tuapeka Mouth.

Ultimately, however, the Tuapeka Mouth 'stalwarts' gave way, and agreed to join forces with Hillend and Clydevale in urging upon the Government that the line should be built by way of Lovell's Flat, Hillend, Tuapeka Mouth, and Pomahaka Downs, thus tapping the country on this side of the river.

At the last meeting in Balclutha the two parties were irreconciable, but they have evidently now realised that there must be unanimity before the Government is likely to take action in building the The Balclutha people have been apathetic in the matter of late years, and have thus apparently missed their opportunity.

At the meeting of the Bruce City Council on Thursday it was decided to endorse the action of the League and support the above route.

The Nature Column.

BY "STUDENT."

"Student" would be giad to hear of any place in the Hokonuis where fossils are common. Whie on the subject I would like to point out that good fossil specimens are always acceptable to the local museum.

If a naturalist wants to spend a pleasant and profitable day without travelling any great distance, he or she, could not do better than take the train for Greenhills and proceed from there to the back

This beach is little known, but as a picnicing ground is superior to my mind, to either Bluff or Ocean Beach. streams of first class water cross the shore and firewood is in abundance. A nice piece of bush, steep sandhills— down which one may toboggan if not too oldand a fair-sized lagoon shallow enough for kiddies to play in, makes up a list of attractions hard to beat. To the naturalist the place is particularly attractive. The marine life is very abundant much more so than at the other places mentioned. This is perhaps accounted for by the fact, that a rocky headland juts far out to sea and protects the bay. In the sandhills one may find moa bones, and pieces of moa eggshell are everywhere. On the seashore are some large Maori middens in which the industrious seeker will nearly always find something worth carrying away. Considerable numbers of axes, hammers, etc., have been found here, and the stone chips used by the Maoris as knives are always to be picked up. The Maoris sometimes had a quarry for the stone used in making implements. It will be found that axes are mostly made from tough hard stone. I think the stone used at Backbeach was taken from some of the numerous basic dykes which are one of the most interesting features about the beach. The geologist will find he is on the aureole of rocks which surround the plutonic mass of the Bluff Hill. The dykes of igneous rock show that the older rocks have been cracked by the upheaval of the rock at the Bluff, and through the cracks the molten rock has welled up. That there has been more than one upheaval is evidenced by the fact that angular blocks from some dykes are included in other outcrops of a different chemical composition, and which outcrops are necessarily younger. The basic dykes -those having less silica in their composition-apparently break up readily, as below the hightide mark will be found square channels running across the rocks which were formerly occupied by basic rock. Augite crystals are fairly common. At the Bluff end of the beach is a large vein, of pegmatite, this being white is easily distinguished from the surrounding rock. Pegmatite is a rock in which the crystals are extra large.

The botanist will find much to give interest. The native sandbinding sedge and the marram grass are growing strongly, but even so the sand is now running over the top of the hill toward the railway. The Rata with its venerable looking, grarled branches, gives a bright touch of colour to the scene, when in bloom. The bush is mixed, and the walk through it on a good track is very enjoyable.

The pools on the beach are full of life, and many named specimens collected therefrom are in our museum. The pana or pawa or mutton fish is some times abundant, and the irridescent shells gleaming on the middens tell of many an ancient tribal feast. These middens by the way usually occur at a lower level than the place where the feasting took place. The natives after a meal getting rid of the debris by the simple process of throwing it down the hill.

The pana is not always plentiful on the rocks, for it seems to migrate. Whether this is due to seasonal changes in the temperature of the water, or whether it is owing to the search for food I am unable to say. If any of our seaside naturalists can help us out with an explanation it would be welcome. Scaweeds and those curious weedlike animals, such as the sea lillies, are in quantities. Here is a fine study for someone to take up. The seaweeds have never been fully dealt with, and there are large numbers to be found and named yet. A reef runs out on the Bluff end of the beach forming a breakwater. Large starfishes, up to 24 inches across are found here, and at certain times hosts of sea urchins. A local resident informed me that he had seen the rocks at this point simply alive with sea urchins, or sea eggs as some people call them.

Space at present does not permit me to give a list of all the interesting things which may be seen on the seaward side of Greenhills, but I may deal with the matter when the holidays come round again.

MORE PLAIN FACTS.

Difficulties about pensions are frequently being adjusted by the secretary, and all who are in doubt should consult him.

PENSIONS.

*26th January, 1920.

Commissioner of Pensions,

Wellington.

Dear Sir,-The above-named man has called upon me in connection with his pensions, the circumstances of the case being as follows. A.B. returned to New Zealand suffering from pleurisy and heart trouble. He has been granted a pension of £6 10s per month for a period of six months from January of this year.

Since his return to New Zealand, he has been regularly attending the Southland Höspital and has been ordered by the medical superintendent not to undertake work of any kind. A.B. has applied for a full pension for himself and supplementary pension for his wife and child.

I would be glad if you would give this matter your attention .-- Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) L. S. GRAHAM, Secretary R.S.A.

Pensions Department,

17th February, 1920. Dear Sir,--Further to my acknowledgement of your letter of the 26th ultimo, I have to inform you that where, as in this case you state that a man has been ordered not to do work of any kind, it is necessary for a medical certificate to this effect to be submitted before the War Pensions' Board can take any action regarding the matter of increasing a pension, and I should be glad if you would arrange to have this done in all similar cases in future.

In this particular case, however, I telegraphed the Southland Hospital, and upon receiving confirmation of the information supplied by you, the War Pensions Board has now been able to increase A.B.'s pension to 40s a week, plus 20s weekly supplementary pension from the instalment due on the 1st inst., and he was notified accordingly on the 13th inst.

His wife has now been granted 20s weekly for herself and 10s weekly for her child concurrent with her husband's grant .- Yours faithfully, (Sgd.) G. FACHE, Commissioner of Pensions.

GRATUITIES.

6th February, 1920.

Dear Sir,-The above-named man has called upon me in connection with his gratuity having received payment for the actual time of his service. The position is that X- was discharged after returning to New Zealand in June, 1918, having contracted gastritis while on service. This man served on the Hospital ship "Maheno," and therefore I consider is entitled to the minimum of 18 months, as stated in the conditions of payment of the Overseas War Service Gratuity, which states the case of men evacuated sick or wounded from an actual theatre of war and returned to New Zealand, as unfit for further overseas service, the period for which the gratuity will be payable shall not be less than 18 calendar months.

The term "theatre of war" shall be as defined in regulations approved from time to time for the issue of war medals. I take it then that a hospital ship could be looked upon as being an actual theatre of war. If this is so then it is clear that X- is entitled to not less than 18 months gratuity.- Yours faithfully,

> > (Reply.)

War Expenses Office, New Zealand Military Forces, Wellington, 23rd February, 1920.

Dear Sir,-In reply to your letter of the 6th inst. I have to inform you that the balance of the above-named soldier's overseas war service gratuity will be forwarded him at an early date.-Yours frish-

(Sgd.) B. DAWSON, For Officer in Charge War Expenses.

Rays of heat can now be detected by means of a delicate electrical instrument known as a thermopile. Cold is only a comparative thing. A piece of ice feels cold because it is at a lower temperature than the hand that touches it, and the thernopile will record a drop in temperature just as it will a rise. Thus, a new instrument has been invented, making use of a thermopile, which will enable the approach of an iccberg to be announced.

The Most Amazing Story Ever Penned.

MARRIE HER WAR OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

FOR NEW READERS.

SIR JOHN MILLBANK, a successful, your own judgment." but stern judge, quarrels with his on-

JACK, who leaves his father's house to fight his own way in the world; and whilst serving with the Australian contingent, under the name of Dick Foster, he meets, and falls in love

KITTY, the adopted daughter of Sir John. However, Sir John has arranged for her marriage with

LORD HAVERHAM. In a moment of despair, Kitty writes to Dick, asking him to meet her in the Blue Room at Rivercourt Mansions. At the appointed hour, Lord Haverham goes to the Blue Room to write some letters, and, unbeknown to the guests, Sir John meets him there. And altercation arises between the two men, resulting in the accidental death of Lord Haverham. Later, Dick arrives in the Blue Room, is caught and accused of murder, and found guilty. Whilst passing the sentence of death, Sir John recognises the prisoner as his own son Jack! A few days later, Sir John interviews the prisoner at his private residence under escort of the warders, and tells him he will I have to serve at least three years' imprisonment. Just as they are leav- ! ing, Dick with the assistance of Kitty makes his escape, and that night they decide to drive into Winnerleigh; but the car breaks down, and they are forced to accept the hospitality of

BEAUMONT CHASE, a millionaire. The following morning, Dick's host informs him that Sir John had called during the night and taken his daughter away. Dick, believing this story, leaves that morning for Winnerleigh. Kitty goes down to breakfast, and is cross-examined by Mr Chase, but on his promise of assistance tells him the whole story. At the services of MR PELHAM WEBB, a clever but unscrupulous detective, to find Dick Foster, and extracts a promise from Kitty not to attempt to see or write to her lover until a year has elapsed.

MR PELHAM WEBB RECEIVES INSTRUCTIONS

Mr Beaumont Chase wrote out a cheque and handed it to the little man, who was watching him expectantly. "That's it, I think," he said.

Mr Pelham Webb, produced a pair of spectacles from his pocket, carefully adjusted them on his nose, and then examined the cheque.

Having done this he neatly folded the precious slip of paper, and thrust it into bis waistcoat pocket.

"It is perfectly correct," he said. "I thank you, Mr Chase, I will not deny that in all my experience I have never before met anyone quite like you. There is a generosity, I may say, a lavishness, about your methods which appeals to me. It will give me very great pleasure to work for ou, and I have now only to ask you to ive your instructions. Whatever they re, I will carry them out,"

The millionaire nodded.

That is what I expected you to say, Yebb. If I mistake not, you are a man the will serve well those who pay you ell. Well, you need not fear that I shall cer you idle. One thing I must warn suit me very well."

The little detective flushed.

"I thought you wished to make use of ray detective skill, my trained intellect, my gift of following up the faintest clue and going straight to the heart of the mystery," he said, a little resentfully.

"No, my dear sir-no," replied the millionaire coolly. "Frankly I don't think much of your trained intellect. You are painstaking, and a careful observer, but as soon as you begin to think you go wrong. Don't think; let me do that."

"As you please, sir," replied the detective stiffly. "You are paying. All the same, I would remind you that my habit of thinking, which you despise, has not been altogther unprofitable to myself. Without it, I should never have got on the track of Dick Foster."

"Are you sure you did get on his track?"

"Well, I found out he was on board your yacht, the Flying Spray, didn't I?" "Are you sure he is on board my "Eh?"

The milionaire laughed.

"My dear Webb, you must give me redit for not being quite a fool. When I found you were following me I arranged a plant. You discovered just what I meant you to discover, and no more. I really wonder you did not suspect something. At a time like this, just after the war, with peace not yet signed, do you think the authorities would allow me take an escaped convict out of the country on board my yacht? Not so likely. Dick Foster is in England hiding with friends. I don't exactly know where he is. That is what I want you to find out. When you have found him, I want you to bring him here."

"Here?"

"Yes, I want to keep him here in hiding for a year. Actually, he will be a prisoner; but I shall pose as his protector and friend. I want to be in a position to a fabulous price Mr Chase engages prevent him from holding any communication with Miss Kitty Millbank, For one year he must disappear utterly, and no one must know of his whereabouts.'

And at the end of the year?"

The millionaire shrugged his shoulders. "At the end of the year Miss Millbank sill marry. On the day she becomes a wife you can hand Dick Foster over to the police. Now go and find him, I an give you a clue. Miss Clara Clarke actress, may know something about him. Make your first inquiries of her, but be discreet. She is a friend of Miss Millbank. "Horrible little worm," he muttered to himself; "but in a game like this one must make use of every instrument that comes to one's hand. Life certainly begins to be more amusing."

CLARA CLARKE AT HOME.

Clara Clarke, nearly the most popular actress in England, was a woman of fifty though in private life she passed for thirty-six, and on the stage looked even younger.

She was very well-preserved, had kept her figure, and was an artist in make-up. Moreover, she had a heart of gold, and this helped to keep her young.

Whenever she could she got away from the glare of the footlights and buried herself in her little cottage and lovely garden on the Essex coast.

It was a warm, wet evening in spring, and the surrounding country looked dreary enough; but the interior of the picturesque little cottage, standing alone on the very edge of the low cliff, was very bright and cheerful.

Miss Clarke believed in bright colours, and the chief living-room-a fair-sized apartment-was gay with flowers and many tinted draperies and bright lights.

The actress—a tall, slim woman with hair skilfully dyed to a beautiful shade cf old gold-now wore a white overall which, in spite of its plainness, had a suggestion of style in its cut and in the way it was worn.

Standing on a chair was an oil-painting the portrait of an old man, in a heavy gilt frame.

Miss Clarke was standing in front of this and gazing at it critically. It was the portrait of a rather distinguished-looking man, whose age it would have been difficult to guess.

His long, curly, black hair, with no streak of grey in it, and his bright eyes, suggested youth, and only the lines and wrinkles on his face indicated that he was a man past sixty.

While the actress was looking at the picture the door of the room opened and a young man entered.

It was Dick Foster.

He was rather curiously dressed. He wore a velvetine jacket, a sealskin waistcoat, a pair of light check trousers, and a turn-down collar and flowing tie of black silk.

As he entered, the actress gave him a quick glance. Then she laughed. It was a frank, hearty laugh of pure fun and amusement.

"Excellent!" she exclaimed. "To the very life. Now sit down, and I'll make up your face."

The young man seated himself on a chair beside that on which the portrait was standing.

"It is awfully good of you, Miss Clarke, but I can hardly think you can make me took like an old man. It is all very well on the stage, but-

"You wait, my lad. It is easier to make the young look old than to make the old look voung-I can tell you that. Let the cannon when it is odds against it. me work at that handsome face of yours Remember, the game for every player is for half an hour, and if I don't make you look like the exact double of my dear departed dad, then I am not the artist in fancy shots. deception which I flatter myself I am. The wig, too, will help a lot. Dad always wore a wig. Thank goodness I kept it!"

She opened a case of theatrical make-up which stood on the table, and busily set

With astonishing delicacy and skill she applied herself to her task, and gradually under her hand the young face seemed to fade away, and a face, bearing a startling resemblance to that of the man in the pertrait, appeared in its place.

When she had finished she stood back, and clapped her hands gleefully. "Now look in the mirror!" she cried triumphantly. The young man rose and approached the fireplace, above which was a looking-glass. As he gazed into it he uttered an exclamation, and then, swinging round, stared at the painting.

"It is wonderful!" he declared.

I should think it was. I could al-mest ask you for your blessing, you look so like my dear old departed dad. Henceforth you are Daddy Clarke, father of the most famous of living actresses. Only

BRINGING THE WHITE OUT OF BAULK.

A point that should be not overlooked is that when a cannon is very uncertain, the after-position is, generally speaking, quite uncertain, whereas an ordinary in-off from a ball can, as a rule, be played by a fair player in such away as to have another in-off. Of course, I do not for a moment advise any player to play an inoff from the red when both balls are in baulk-except under certain conditions, such as, say, when he only requires a few for game-when he could easily-or nearly as easily—get a cannon. By all means play the cannon if there is a very reasonable chance of getting it-and with the same position this will vary with the ability of the striker-but do not go for to score as many as he can, and not to play what for him may be more or less

When playing an in-off from a ball that is in baulk, a player must be careful that he does not leave the ball still in baulk if it is possible to avoid doing so. Of course. many positions occur when, if not absolutely impossible to bring the ball out of baulk, it would be so terribly difficult to do so that no player-not even a profesfessional-would attempt it. On the other hand, numberless positions occur when it is as easy, or nearly as easy, to bring the ball out of baulk as to leave it

A RUN-THROUGH TO BRING A BALL OUT OF BAULK.

When no half-ball stroke is on. A fine stroke, unless played very strongly indeed, will leave the object-ball in baulk, whereas a run-through stroke—any stroke that is fuller than a half-ball stroke being a run-through, even though the degree of run-through may be slight-will bring it out. Generally speaking, whenever a ball in baulk is so situated that the in-off is only on by means of a fine stroke or a run-through—the object-ball being so located that it will strike the bottom cush ion in either case—the pocket should be gained by means of the full stroke.

BRINGING THE BALL OUT OF BAULK BY MEANS OF A THIN SCREW.

A example of positions that often occur when the in-off can only be got by means of a screw-shot. In these cases it will sometimes happen that, though the easiest way of making the shot by means of a half-ball screw, this method of playing the stroke would leave the object-ball in baulk. Instead, by hitting the objectball less than half-ball, and playing with increased screw-as compensation for t' thinner hitting-it can often be brought out of baulk, and though this is by no means an easy stroke, it is one that is well worthy of notice. The thick, intersected line referred to shows a direction the object-ball may take as the result of thick contact, and the fine, intersected line a direction given by a thinner con-

On bringing a ball out of baulk, it may e pointed out that in playing to bring a ball out of baulk, whether the red or the white, there is no need to try and see how far out of baulk it is possible to send the ba'i as so many players do. Sometimes, of course, it may be the game to bring the ball only a very little way out of baulk; but as a rule, it will generally be best to send it towards the centre of the table, for, by so doing, an in-off into one of the four out-of-baulk pockets is almost certain to be left.

SOUTHLAND R.S.A.

ANNUAL REPORT.

In submitting the report for the year ending March 31, 1920, it is gratifying to record the great increase in membership, which has grown from 583 financial members to 1710 financial members, and though the New Zcaland Expeditionary Force has ceased to exist, and all those who served in the great war have returned to New Zealand, there are problems connected with repatriation, pay and allowances, pensions, gratuities, land, etc., that are still to be faced, and it behoves all returned soldiers to concentrate their united efforts towards the successful solving and adjusting of these subjects. The policy of the R.S.A. has always been sound and has followed a line of action, which while recognising the claims of returned soldiers and their dependants upon the country has also studied the resources and ability of the country to meet the claims put forward, and by this means the Returned Soldiers' Association has the confidence of the public.

The Association is not in any way connected with party politics, and is non-sectarian, and thus its views are not narrewed by following any particular shade of political thought.

MEMBERSHIP.

Owing to the great increase of membership, in the early part of the year this Association decided to form what were termed country sub-committees, and immediately sub-committees were formed at Tostapere and Lumsden. At the Annual Conference held in May a new scheme of organisation was in augurated and a District Organiser was appointed for Otago and Southland. He immediately visited Southland and formed sub-associations at Winton, Orepuki, Bluff, Otautau, Nightcaps and Dipton, while representatives from this Association formed sub-associations at Woodlands, Wyndham, Edendale and Fortrose, making a total of twelve seb-associations throughout the district, with a membership of 683 members.

The total number of unfinancial members in the Association is 131, 66 of these being unfinancial for the years 1918-19, 1919-20. The amount of subscription due from these members represents the sum of £98 10s. A great number of unfinancial members are men who have evidently left the district as notices sent to them have been returned through the post as un-found.

PRESIDENT AND EXECUTIVE.

As you are aware at the last Annual Meeting, Dr. Garfield Crawford was elected president, but owing to the press of professional duties he was reluctantly compelled to tender his resignation, and at a bi-monthly meeting held on September 29th., Mr R. B. Caws, was elected president in his stead.

Of the original committee elected six members have resigned at different periods during the year, and for the last two menths there have been two members short on the committee. Owing to the difficulty that has been experienced in getting sufficient members to hold a General Meeting these two vacancies were not filled. and a suggestion is being put forward by the out-going Executive, that vacancies on the committee caused by resignation, In perial and New Zealand rates is now Executive will be as nearly as possible elected at the Annual Meeting.

During the year Mr D. J. B. Seymour held twenty-seven meetings, and eight extraordinary general meetings have been held, one of the latter being called by re-

"THE DIGGER."

At an extraordinary general meeting held on October 10th., 1919, it was decided to publish a weekly paper called "The Digger," and a Board of Management consisting of five members with the president ex-officio, was elected. As you are aware this paper has been launched and the editor, Mr F. G. Blake, will, during the course of the evening report on the progress made.

GENERAL SECRETARY.

During the year Mr D. J. B. Seymour resigned the position of general secretary at headquarters. My Seymour filled this position for a number of years, and there is no doubt that his retirement has been a great loss to the Associations through-out the whole of New Zealand. Nevertheless it is gratifying to know that Mr Seymour intends to still keep in touch with executive matters. The position of general secretary has been filled by the appointment of Lt.-Col James Pow, of Dunedin.

REPATRIATION.

The appreciation of the R.S.A. is due to the Repatriation Board and its staff for the good work they have done during the year. This department is in full sympathy with the returned men, and it is safe to say that no other department carries out its duties more sympathetically than does the Repatriation Board.

During the year Mr S. B. Crawford who was first elected R.S.A. representative on this Board was transferred to Dunedin, and tendered his resignation Mr L. S. Graham being elected in his stead, and a report will be submitted during the evening by your representative.

LAND SETTLEMENT.

The Association has devoted a great amount of attention and time to the question of Land Settlement. It has lost no opportunity in pressing the importance of opening up more land under the Discharged Soldiers' Settlement Act, and there is no doubt that a bold land policy is required to enable those lands which now lie idle to be cut up for closer settlement, and grazing lands to be stocked to their full carrying capacity. This action will not only settle more returned soldiers on land, but will be advantageous to the country as it will considerably increase the production of the Dominion.

The N.Z.R.S.A. are preparing a Land Roll, that is a roll of men requiring land, and all those men who want land have been requested to furnish the Association with the particulars of the class of land required, i.e., whether dairying or pastoral. The object of preparing this roll is to ascertain, if possible, the exact number of soldiers' requiring land, so that the R.S.A. may be able to support the policy presented to the Government urging the necessity of acquiring more land for settlement. Although up to the present time the Association has not been successful in having a representative on the Land Board, yet during the year we have obtained representatives on the newly constituted Land Purchase Boards of the Dominion.

GRATUITIES.

The question of gratuities is one that affects vitally every returned man. very many cases owing to anomalies existing under the regulations governing the gratuity, hardship is imposed. The R.S.A. have pressed the Government repeatedly to set up a Gratuity Appeal Board. This has now been done and all cases of anomalies existing in connection with the gratuities are being forwarded to headquarters and placed before this appeal board. Where it is proved that such cases are cases of hardship the Board will recommend to the Minister of Defence that payment be made.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES. It is satisfactory to record that during the year the following adjustments have been made in connection with nav and allowances. Payment of retrospective separation allowance and children's allowance is now being made from the date of entry into camp, thus soldiers' wives are receiving 3s per day separation allowance from their husband's entry into camp, and the guardian of the children is receiving 1s 6d per day for each child, from the date of the father's entry into camp. It is even more gratifying to know that widowed mothers are now being paid 3s per day separation allowance in place of 10s 6d per week. Retrospective payment at expeditionary rates of pay is a'so being made to the members of the N.Z.E.F. who received the lower rate of 4s per day, on their entry into camp. Payment of the difference between the may be filled by those nominees next in , being made to those nurses and soldiers order in the ballot at the Annual Meet- 1 who enlisted in the Imperial Army, and ing, thus ensuring that members of the to members of the Motor Boat Patrol who were resident in New Zealand before the

PENSIONS.

The question of pensions also demands careful consideration. There is no doubt whatever that the pension at present granted is inadequate, and the Association has pressed for an increase of pensions by the addition of plus percentages up to 150 per cent (i.e.) £3 per week, supplementary pension and attendant's pensions being over and above such rate, and the dependant's allowance to be assessed at the The Association has also asked that legislation should be altered to allow in the case of the death of a husband as the result of war disability, his wife or dependants to be eligible in every case for pension. This applies particularly to men married subsequent to a disablement. The Association also asks that a pension be paid for war disablement at any time after discharge, and that the present legislation restricting the period to seven years' be amended. That examination for T.B. and nerve cases be made by specialists; that no soldiers' pension be reduced without the soldier appearing before a medical officer preferably before a medical board and that a Pension Appeal Board be set up and provision made to assist applicants to put their own cases before the Appeal Board. It is gratifying to note that the Pension Board are now paying pensions on behalf of those men who are in mental hospital, and that the wife or dependants of those so unfortunately placed, now draw the full pension as laid down in the case of death. On the man leaving mental hospital the amount of full pension is made retrospective for a period of two years, and the wife or dependant then draws a pension according to the man's disable-

MEDICAL.

The Association have also strongly urged that men suffering from T.B. shall not receive less than five months' hospital treatment on the one hand, or on the other hand should not be discharged owing to lack of sanatorium accomodation. or be discharged at his own request. That the allowance for limbless men procecding to centres for limbs, should be increased so that such men would in addition to the actual expense incurred receive an amount equal to the wages lost during their absence.

SOLDIERS' FINANCIAL ASSIST-ANCE.

The Association have pressed for the administration of the Soldiers' Financial Assistance Fund to be handed over to the Repatriation Board. At the present time the administration of this is far from satistactory, or sympathetic and it appears that unless this request is acceded to, there is little chance of men receiving assistance from a board which was supposedly set up to grant assistance.

GENERAL

In view of the fact that the general elections occurred during the year the Association decided to hold public meetings and place the case of returned soldiers in a clear and consise manner before the general public. With this object in view public meetings were held and the questions vitally affecting returned soldiers and their dependants were dealt with in such a manner that those present could plainly see that all was not as it should be.

When the names of the candidates for Parliamentary honours became known, a series of questions which dealt solely with returned soldiers' affairs were drawn up, and submitted to each candidate for his answers. These questions and answers being published in the columns of the local press without comment of any kind, a d as a result of this action there is no doubt that the attitude of the candidates towards returned soldiers generally was brought clearly before the pablic. ANZAC DAV

We are on the eve of what is to the soldier the most sacred day of the year, that is Anzac Day, Anzac Day does not represent to us simply the day on which we entered the great adventure as a fighting unit. It has grown to be a day of far greater importance, it has grown to be a day on which we soldiers pay a silent tribute to those of our comrades who have "gone west," and who amongst us has not lost relations or comrades during the last five years.

I, is proposed on this Anzac Day to hold a memorial service, a service in which the returned soldier will pay a tribute to his fallen comrades.  $\hat{\mathbf{I}}$  feel sure there is no need to ask all returned soldiers to be present at this ceremony, which is to be held in the Municipal Theatre, at 3 p.m., on Sunday next.

CHIAPTER 6.

When the news that Mahmoud had brought to the Commandant at Ismailia proved to be correct, he was released from custody, and allowed to go after receiving bucksheesh. He made his way to the Arab town and joined up with the local moghassils, who, seeing him well provided with money, made him extremely welcome.

He sold the camel which he had obtained by the means related in the last chapter, and the proceeds, together with the handsome reward he had received from the Commandant, made him seem a wealthy man.

When he heard of the fight at Tulul, and that the authorities were requisitioning all the native carts for use as ambulances, he at once offered his services, as a driver. These carts were to be used for the conveyance of the wounded prisoners, and the wily moghassil at once thought that there might be an opportunity to obtain some plunder .

Thus, it came about that the youthful Ahmet saw his father driving the ambulance in which was the wounded Abu Sulieman.

Ahmet stood still, being overcome with urprise at the sight. Not so Mahmoud who although he had not seen his son for many weeks, had yet heard of his every movement through that mysterious brotherhood of the moghassils.

He made a sign to Ahmet to follow, and drove his mules off to where the rest of the carts were drawn up ready to depart. Ahmet, stealing a look at his comrades, saw that they were all too cusy to trouble about him, so he followed the cart.

Mahmoud, squatting on the ground beside his mules, made no sign as Ahmet approached, till the latter salaaming deeply, said: "Naharak Saicd Abu Mahmoud (greetin! or good-day to you, O my father, Mahmoud), when Mahmoud made answer (Saida Walal Ahmet Ben Mahmoud), and embraced him. Mahmoud listened eagerly to all that Ahmet had to tell him of the events of the last few weeks, and all that Ahmet knew of the dealings of Abu Sulieman, he managed to extract by means of cleverly put leading questions. Then, to Ahmet's query as to whicher the old man was alive still, Mahmoud replied: "He yet lives, but if it should be the will of Allah, that there be no moon this night, he will have joined Eblis in Gehenna by the rising of the sun."

At sunset came the order to march, and Ahmet, forgetting his new friends, the "Umpteenth Aussies," in his joy at being with his father, went with the ambulances.

Acress the creaking swaying pontoon bridge went the long serpent-like line of native carts, each with its groaning freight,, whilst ever it became darker as the short Egyptian twilight, so short as to be practically non-existent, drew to a close. The black night clouds hovered overhead, as if impatiently waiting their turn to cover up the sky and put the world to sleep. Cart after cart, came down the steep eastern bank of the canal and crossed the bridge, the drivers hastening their unwilling beasts with cries of a a-a-a-a-a, whilst staff officers tried to hasten their passage in order that the crossing should be accomplished before darkness set in. By means of clever mauoenvring, Mahmoud had arranged that his cart should not make the crossing before the darkness had set in. He had too much sense to wait till the last, as he well knew that he would then be in the full view of the rear guard, and observation from British troops was not what he desired at that particular time. As his team began to cross the bridge he said to Ahmet: "Remember my son, that thy father is a moghassil, and that none may spy on that which he shall do, lest the evil eye may rest upon him. Take thou heed therefore that thou shalt not tell any man, that which thou shalt see." By this time the cart was halfway across the bridge, and Mahmoud dropping off, made his way to the back, and grabbing hold of the groaning Abu Sulieman, incontinently and unconcernedly heaved him over the bridge into the canal, and then resumed his seat by the astonished Ahmet, as if nothing had occurred, and a few moments later was belabouring and anathematising his team as they breasted the slope of the western bank.

ORIGINAL.

Now, he did not think it worth while to mention to Ahmet the reason for his action, and thus the boy sat and shivered with dread all through the long night journey to Ismailia, which place, they reached at sunrise. Mahmoud having delivered the other patients over to the Egyptian military hospital, where all wounded prisoners were sent, and having received the payment for his services, betook himself to the abode of his brother moghassils, taking with him Ahmet. Nor in the confusion that occured, was Abu Sulieman missed, and it was not for some two days later that enquiries were set on foot with regard to him. When he could not be found, it was concluded that he had made his escape during the journey to Ismailia.

Later it was ascertained that the body of a Haj had been found floating in the canal near the Bitter Lakes, and that it had been buried with all the marks of respect that were due to a Sidi (saint), by the Arab fishermen, who had found it; this gave colour to the supposition that Abn Slieman had been drowned whilst trying to escape.

The true story of that night's happenings were known only to Mahmoud the moghassil and his son, Ahmet, who did not dare to say anything.

When the "Umpteenths" had finished their unsavoury job of cleaning up the battlefield, they were ordered to camp at Ismailia, and it was not long before they were over-running the town, and esperally native quarters, chiefly for the reason that the latter had been placed "out of bounds."

Mahmoud had found congenial companions in the Arab town and had left the small Ahmet to his own devices, Ahmet had lost his cherished rifle and as his uniform made him an object of derision to the small boys of Ismailia, he was extremely unhappy, and he often wished himself back at Helmieh with his small companions, or more often, back again with the "Umpteenths."

One day he saw coming down the street a party of soldiers, and at first he made as if to run towards them, for he recognised the badges of the "Umpteenths."

Then suddenly, he remembered that he was a descrier. He had heard enough to know what that meant, and he started to slink away. He was too late, however, for a voice called out: "Halt there, Sergt. McKenzie." With the eyes of the kmailia boys on him, Ahmet halted and stood to attention."

He made a pathetic little figure as be stood there. Gone were the ucat little brown boots and leggings, gone was the rifle and the little haversack and water bottle, while his buttons which he had been used to keep so bright, were now dirty and dingy. The stalwart Aussies surrounded their mascot. They rained questions on him which he declined to answer, simply saying that he was their prisoner and asking to be taken to the C.O..

"Bli me," said the Sergt, who happen ed to be the senior of the party. "But he's a game little cove, my oath if be "Still," with a wink at his mates, "its ther clink fer 'im this time, and no error."

"D'yer think they'll shoot im. ser geant?" said one of the others.

"Betcher life!" said the sergeant "Think what a horrible example 'e is!" To all this Ahmet made no answer, but strode along with his captors till the guardroom was reached, when he was with extreme gravity, handed over to the sergh of the guard, who made out a crime sheet, and placed him in a cell. When he was left alone, Ahmet's cour age deserted him. He wept.

In the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening, the Rev. G. Crockett conducted a memorial service for the late Mr H. Knox, who had for over 30 years been connected with the life of the church of Nightcaps, during part of which he filled the position of deacon, and as advancing years prevented him from taking such an active part, he was made a life member of the deaconate. There was a good congregation present to pay its last respects to one who was respected and revered for his uprightness and integrity. The Rev. Crockett delivered an appropriate address taken from the text, "Jesus wept." The choir rendered an anthem, "Come Ye Disconsolate." At the close of the service the Dead March wa played by Miss Perry, all standing. The Rev. A. McDonakl, Otautau, had purposed being present to conduct this service. He had been associated with the late Mr Knox during the early days of the district, and was well fitted to pay a last tribute to the departed one, but circumstances prevented him from being present, which he much regretted.

INCONSISTENCY.

There recently appeared in the daily press, information to the effect that representatives of the Returned Soldiers' Association had visited Sir James Allen in order to bid him-good-bye and wish him success in his new sphere of activity as High Commissioner. To this no objection car be raised whatever may be our political differences, but when we have such a display of inconsistent statements as the vice-president inflicted upon the Minister for Defence, it is time to draw attention to it and protest against the claim of representing the R.S.A. throughout the Deminion. The R.S.A. has no political platform, although it can only achieve redress, through political channels, and if any official of the R.S.A. oversteps the mark so as to cause the press to state that returned soldiers are satisfied with Sir James Allen and that the deputation's utterances were the expression of the returned soldiers themselves, then it is time some wings were clipped. Precedence has possibly established that at a time like this it is fitting to say nice things irrespective of what truth they contain. The vice-president stated that Sir James Allen had always been "just." If this is so, the work of the R.S.A. would have been reduced to practically nil; but it needs no demonstrating that the Minister for Defence only yielded and granted the legitimate rights asked for by the R.S.A. under extreme pressure, and the major portion in close proximity to a general election.

If justice has been meted out, then why has the Dominion Executive and the official organ continually complained as indicated in "Quick March," on 10th June, 1919: "It is unquestionable that the Government of the day has been the principal promoter of 'grouse' by the senseless failure to consult the R.S.A. fairly and reasonably on matters in which returned men an i dependants are vitally concerned. The authorities,' too, have shown a disposition to move very slowly along the path of justice."

Sir James Allen was certainly in the position to see that the authorities did move along the path of justice. A further lamentation by the same jour-

nat states:

Take for example, the representation of the R.S.A. on the Pensions Board. It should have been self-evident that such representation should have been granted, in accordance with the elementary principles of justice, as soon as a suitable returned soldier was available; yet many months clapsed before the request of the 1917 Conference of the N.Z.R.S.A. (supported by a deputation to the Minister of Defence) was granted. Take the retrospection scheme; take the Repatriation Act: is is the same story in each case. The R.S.A. was ignored when the 'gratuity scheme' and the Repatriation Bill were rushed through Parliament in the hurry-scurry session of last year. In the administration of the Discharged Soldiers' Settlement Act there has been the same unintelligible delay in giving proper heed to the just claims of the R.S.A. for representation on Land Boards. A proper recognition of the New Zealand Returned Soldiers' Association—sane consultation with the executive—in the administration of laws and regulations affecting returned soldiers will reduce naturally the complaining and the criticism which the old ignoring has necessarily caused."

Dealing with pay and allowances the Dominion Executive expressed itself in no uncertain terms: "The retrospective application of the Act has been declined by the Minister of Defence who regards the fact that any man should enlist without the compulsion of the Conscription Act as conclusive proof that he was able to leave his dependants in comfort. It is this Ministerial view which makes it impossible to treat the aphorism that 'a man was a fool to volunteer too soon," as a jest any longer."

Now does the vice-president reconcile this with the statement that the Minister had dealt justly. It is self-evident that either one is wrong and the vice-president should exercise more discretion in matters which involve the opinions of the R.S.A. generally.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W.G.M., Invercargill.—We have made a complete criticism of your poem, but it has been unavoidably held over through pressure on our space. Our comment will be published in next issue.—Edt.

T.A., Invercargill.—Answers to correspendents editorship not vacant. Nature does seem to have been unjust if we are to take seriously the following extract from your letter: "My chief affliction is a keen sense of humour and I consider that I am peculiarly fitted to fill the situation because of this infirmity." It would appear that you have been dong suffering but what have we done to deserve all this. Surely you have overlooked the fact that we, also, have a sense of humour: but, I suppose it's a case of "Bear ye one anothers burdens." Specimen copy not suitable. -- Edt.

LIMBLESS MEN.

At the last meeting of the Town Council it was decided that limbles men be allowed to travel free on the trams. The "Digger" is glad to acknowledge their generous action.

MASONIC CRAND LODGE.

Mr Farrant, who has for some time pass been making necessary arrangements regarding accommodation for the Grand Ledge visitors, asks us to contradict the report that 400 persons are coming, and that a number will be without accommodation. The facts are, that 232 are coming, and plenty of accommodation is available, in fact there is a surplus of four beds.

SOUTHLAND'S PART IN THE WAR.

The "Digger" would like to receive information from officers and other ranks regarding the above. Extracts from diaries and other items are urgently required for the writer of these articles. It is requested that all matter especially regarding early history be sent to the Editor as soon as possible.

WE SHALL REMEMBER THEM.

They sleep beneath no immemorial yews, Their resting-place no temple arches hem;

No blazoned shaft or graven tablet woos

Mcn's praise—and yet we shall remember them.

The unforgetting clouds shall drop their tears;

The winds in ceaseless lamentation wail,

For God's white knights are lying on their biers,

Who pledged their service to restore the Grail.

They gave their lives to make the whole world free;

They recked not to what flag they were assigned,
The starry banner, cross, or fleur-delisTheir sacrifice was made for all mankind.

For them the task is done, the strife

is stilled;
No more shall care disturb, nor zeal condomn:

And when the larger good has been fulfilled,

In coming years we shall remember them.

How can the world their deeds forget? In France White crosses everywhere lift pallid hands,

Like silent sentinels with sword and lance,

To keep their memory sale for other lands.

What need have they for holy sepulture?
Within the hearts of men is hallowed

ground—
A sanctuary where they rest secure,
And with Love's immortality are

And far-off voices of the future sing, "They shall remain in memory's diadem;"

And winds of promise still are whispering

That same refrain, "We shall remember them."

AMUSEMENTS.

CHARLES SMYTHE AT THE ABLION.

Charles Smythe, the eminent Australian basso, will appear under special engagement, for the first time in New Zealand, during the week commencing tomorrow, at the Ablion Theatre, in conjunction with the "feature" film "A Heart in Pawn." Mr Smythe is said to have experienced a career of success probably uneclipsed in the annals of the stage. A native of Sydney, he achieved immediate fame on making his debut at the London Palace Theatre, and subsequently appeared with triumphal effect as Mephistopheles in "Faust," with Dame Melba, Madame Calve, and Alice Esty, grand opera companies. Mr Smythe who is now in the zenith of his vocal possibilities is reported to be gifted with a voice of rare quality, power and flexibility, which he uses with infinite artistic grace. His offerings will include the "Prologue," from "I Pagliacci," "Up from Somerset," "The Drum-Major," "The Floral Dance," and "Captain Mac." Mr Smythe will be assisted by his Merry Musical Maids. Miss Bathie Stuart, who will make a welcome reappearance after a tremendonsly successful tour of the N.Z. Miss Stuart's work is bright and clever and her interpretation of Maori love songs and folk lore has earned for her the title of the pakeha girl with the Maori songs. Miss Stuart's repertoire has been augumented by presentations of rare Maori numbers, the Maoris considering her interpretations as little short of marvellous. Miss Anita Green, lyric soprano, and Miss Miriam Kutner, accompaniste who will also give delightful vocal numbers. The box plans are now on view at the Bristol, and intending patrons should book early to avoid being disappointed.

Owing to the diminution of the density of the atmosphere in proportion to the altitude and a corresponding increase in the average velocity of the wind, navigation of the air by aeroplanes or heavier than air machines is considered impossible at heights exceeding 15,000ft.

R.S.A. EXECUTIVE.

A meeting of the above Executive was held recently. Mr R. B. Caws reported on his interview with the War Funds Association. After much discussion it was decided that the Executive Council of the R.S.A. is of the opinion that the action of the W.F.A. in discontinuing tobacco supplies to the sick and wounded returned men in hospital is not in accordance with the intentions of the citizens who made donations to the fund, and we regret that such action was taken before previously consulting the R.S.A. in the matter.

It was resolved that in future the R.S.A. will undertake the supplying of tobacco to all returned soldier patients in hospital or convalescent homes.

The secretary was instructed to forward this resolution to the Southland W.F.A. and to thank them for the donations given in the past.

Request from the Woodlands sub-as. sociation for members to attend unveiling of memorial on the 28th.—Decided that as many as possible attend.

Letter from Southland Law Society.— Decided to publish all correspondence on the matter.

It was decided to hold a conference after the annual meeting to discuss rebate to sub-associations.

Mr Stock, who had been acting as hospital visitor, tendered his resignation.— Decided to accept with regret, but Mr Stock to be requested to allocate tobacco on behalf of the R.S.A. wounded soldiers on behalf of the R.S.A. wounded soldiers.

A good deal of routine matter was transacted and a number of cases dealt with.

OTAUTAU.

Mi T. A. Buckingham has been elected as the representative of the Wallace County on the Bluff Harbour Board.

Mr M. Gonley, stationer, of Otautau is agent for "The Digger," and has shown a real live interest in it. On several occasions sales have been increased by his energy.

WESTERN DISTRICT SUB-UNION.

The above union met at the Globe Hotel on Saturday. Present: Messrs E. Matheson, L. Brown, J. Breen, M. Mills. J. Cummings and McGee. Mr Matheson was elected to the chair in the absence of the president, Mr F. C. Mills.

The secretary was instructed to secure black and green jerseys for the Western District representative team if possible.

It was agreed that the captain of each senior team hand in the players' names to the Union before the opening of the fixtures.

Juniors will be allowed to play in one senior match during the season. All senior players who played in two matches last season are seniors this season.

It was agreed that it would be illegal for any player to play for more than one club.

The Waiau Rovers were granted black jerseys with white collars as their club colours.

The names of L. Cross and W. Welsh were added to the list of referees, and that of A. Baird was deleted.

The captains of the various teams will be required to collect one shilling from each player to pay referees' expenses.

All representative matches are to be played alternately at Riverton and Otautau.

It was agreed that three rounds be played this season.

Seniors.-May 1-Riverton v. Waian Rovers at Riverton, McGie referee. May 5 — Orepuki v. Otautau at Orepuki, McIntyre. Nightcaps a bye. May 8-Waiau Rovers v. Orepuki at Tuatapere, Liddell. at Nightcaps, McGie.

The president, before closing the meeting, said that the secretary had rendered god services during the war period, and moved that he be voted the sum of £3 3s.—Mr E. Matheson also spoke culogistically of the good work done by the secretary, and seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

SOUTH OTAGO NOTES.

BALCLUTHA, April 20.

The Clutha R.S.A. are going to make a his effort to popularise their rooms this winter. On Saturday the committee drew up a draft programme of social evenings, A billiard tournament is included in the list and as it is to be open to all should help in no small way the funds of the Association.

On Friday last the district organiser (Mr D. Colqahoun) in company with a deputation from the R.S.A. paid a visit to the soldier settlers in Clifton. It was found that the men were "up against" it. Their case will be looked into and every effort made to miprove conditions for them.

Mr J. C. Browne, the Farmers' Union organiser, paid a visit to Balclutha on Friday last for the purpose of meeting nonmembers of the Union and endeavouring to get them to join up. There were about a dozen at the meeting, only one of whom, however, was a non-member, and he left shortly after the commencement. Mr Browne gave an outline of what the aims and objects of the Union were and is staying in the district making a personal canvass of farmers. The prospects are for an increased membership.

Considerable interest is being taken in Balclutha in the forthcoming visit on May 3rd of Clark McConachy, the Dominion's champion billiardist. He is to give an exhibition in the Central Rooms.

Preparations for Anzac Day are proceeding satisfactorily. It is proposed to hold a combined service in the Oddfellows' Hall on Sunday afternoon. A parade (headed by the band) of all returned men, Cadets, Territorials, Friendly Societies, and others is to march from the Borough Council Chambers to the Hall, where the ministers will conduct the service. I understand the Balclutha Methodist Church intend to unveil their Roll of Honour on that day. The combined service this year promises to be something out of the ordinary.

Kaka Point is at last awaking to its importance as a holiday resort. recent meeting of the Welfare Society it was decided to erect swings, see-saws and other attractions on the beach. Other improvements are also to be carried out in the near future. It was decided to approach the Minister with a view to getting additional bush lands laid aside as scenic reserves. The Point is rich in native bush and it would add greatly to the value of the place as a resort if the areas proposed were laid apart for the purpose stated. As far as natural beauty of the beaches and bush scenery is concerned the Port Molyneaux beaches are second to none in the Dominion, and this is amply proved by the increasing number of holiday makers who visit the place every year. Buildings are going up all over the place and there are a large number of dwellings there now. The society are going the right way about making the place attractive and it is to be hoped their efforts will continue.

The Owaka Cricket Club held a very successful concert in aid of their funds, on Friday night last. The Club have had a very successful season and put in some solid work. Next season it is hoped the other clubs in the district will follow Owaka's footsteps and "get busy," and resuscitate the game in South Otago.

For some time past the settlers of the Catlin's district have been dissatisfied with the railway service, and on Thursday (15th), Mr Bowles (District Traffic Manager) in company with Mr Malcolm, M.P., paid a visit to Owaka, and met a large number of settlers in the Oddfellows' Hail. The position was fully discussed—Mr Bowles gave a sympathetic hearing and indicated in his reply that there was every probability of an improved service.

Football starts in earnest in South SOtago next Saturday, when Toko play Crescent at Kaitangata, and Clutha play Clinton at Balclutha. The various teams throughout the district have been getting in some good practice-work and keen competition should be the result this season. Last season Crescent came out on top after a great tussle with Yoko, these two teams having to play no less than three times to prove who was winner. The S.O.R.F.U. met on Saturday, and drew up the fixtures for the first round as follows:—

April 24.--Crescent v. Toko at Kaitangata: Clutha v. Clinton, at Balclutha. Owaka, a bye.

May 1 .- Clutha v. Owaka, at Owaka; Clinton v. Crescent, at Balclutha; Toko

May 8.—Clutha v. Toko, at Milton; Owaka v. Clinton, at Balclutha; Crescent,

May 15.—Crescent v. Clutha, at Kaitangata; Toko v. Owaka, at Balclutha; Clinton, a byo.

May 22.—Owaka v. Crescent, at Owaka; Toko v. Clinton, at Balclutha; Clutha,

The annual meeting of the Clutha R.S.A. will be held on Monday next, when matters of more than ordinary interest will be discussed. The new secretary (Mr A. C. Laing), has settled down to work in earnest and is now getting matters in connection with the Association in good order.

The Bruce by-election is over and for the first time in over 25 years the constituency is represented by a Liberal-Mr John Edie having secured a majority of 150 odd over the Government candidate, Mr Jas. Begg. Mr Edie is well and favourably known in Bruce and should fill the position of M.P. equally as well as he has filled other positions he has held.

We learn, says the "Free Press" that the Dunedin City Corporation's electrical engineer is preparing an estimate of the cost of linking Balclutha up with the Waipori scheme. #### WEDDING BELLS.

Or Thursday morning a very pretty wedding took place at the R.C. Church, Dipton, when Miss Annie Quinn, of Kilkeel, Ireland, was united in the bonds of matrimony to Mr P. O'Callaghan, Dipton, a former member of the Main Body, Otago Mounted Rifles, the Rev. Father O'Neill, officiating. The bride was given away by Mr W. Stewart, and attended by Miss Molly Baird.

The bridal frock was of ivory crepe-dechine with wreath and veil, and the bridesmaid were saxe blue with picture hat and bouquets of beautiful lilies and rata. Mr W. Cassin attended the bridegroom. After the ceremony the party adjourned to the residence of Mr W. Stewart, and here the wedding repast was served, toasts being proposed by Father O'Neil, Mr W. Stewart, Mr P. O'Callaghan and Mr J. O'Callaghan.

Later, when the bride and bridegroom left on their honeymoon, the former wore a beautiful Navy serge costume and dainty saxe blue and fawn hat.

The mound-shaped nests of the junglefowls of Australia, in which the eggs are hatched by the heat of the decomposing vegetation, are sometimes fifteen feet high and one hundred and fifty feet in circumference. They are believed to be the largest nests made by any creature.

SOCIAL NOTES.

On Friday night a most enjoyable dance was given in Ashley's Hall by Misses Hain and Wilson. The hall was very prettily decorated and the supper tables were artistically arranged and adorned with red geraniums and soft greens. Among those present were: Mesdames Wilson and Hain, W. Jones, A. Hawke, A. Roe, Misses Hain, Wilson, Moffett, Prain,, Vyner, Crofts, Featherstone, Bews, Snow, Hazlett, Field, Tuckor, Brodie, Strettell, Dyer and Logan; Messrs Callender, Cameron, Dalgliesh, Farnall, Gilmour, Hawke, Hazlett, Irving, Thomson, Owen, A. Saunders, Morrah, Prain, and Wil-

A very delightful party for children was given by Mrs J. Oliver, Earn street, on Saturday afternoon, some of those I noticed were: Misses Moffett, Snow (2), Crawford, Webb, Tapley, Miller, Bews, Macdonald, Hodges (2), Gilkison and Gilmour. In the evening there was a small dance for the older one.s

R.S.A. AFFAIRS.

LAKE COUNTY.

The Queenstown branch of the R.S.A. held a meeting on Saturday evening, Capt. P. Mackenzie was re-elected president, and Mr Thos T. Wilson, secretary. The Arrowtown branch also held its annual meeting, Mr W. McBaren, being elected president, Mr T. B. Fletcher, vicepresident; T. W. Butel, treasurer; and Mr John Forbes, secretary.

"The Digger" will be pleased to be kept in touch with local doings. Messrs Reid and Sons have increased the circulation of the paper, for which we thank them. They will be pleased to accept all applications for "The Digger."

A social was held in Queenstown to honour the return of some of the local boys. The function was held in the Garrison Hall. Medals were presented to Petty Officer G. Green and Private Robert M'Kinley. There was a good attendance. The Mayor (Mr Simson) presided, and made the presentations, and an address was also given by Dr Stewart.

Mr John Jenkins, junior, who recently sold his farm at Crown Terrace to Mr W. H Thompson, was, with his wife and family, farewelled at a social in the schoolhouse by the residents of Crown Terrace. Mr Alfred Miller presided, and during the evening, on behalf of the residents of the district, presented Mr Jenkins with a purse of soverigns with which to buy a memento of the high esteem in which he and his wife were held by their neighbours. Mr Jenkins suitably replied.

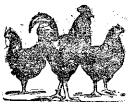

A very preity wedding was celebrated at Arrowtown recently, when Mr Matthew Elliot, only son of Mr George Elliot, of Melbourne, was married to Miss Catherine Butel, second daughter of Mr an i Mrs John Butel, "Willow Bank," Arrowtown. Mr Elliot was a Main Body bry, and well known amongst a great circle of returned men, who wish him every success in his married life. The ceremony took place at St. Paul's Church, Arrowtown, the Rev R. de Lambert, being the officiating clergyman. The bride, who was given away by her father, was attended by Miss Lucille Preston as bridesmaid, and Mr Robert Hunter was best man. The wedding breakfast was partaken of at the residence of the bride's parents, after which the happy couple left for Queenstown, en route to Dunedin, where the honeymoon is to be spent.

TUATAPERE.

A special meeting of the Tuatapere branch of the R.S.A. was held on Tuesday night, when there was a good attendance of members. Arrangements were made for a parade on Anzac Day, a specin service being arranged for. The rebate on members' subscriptions to sub-branches was again discussed, and Messrs Cunningham and McFeeley were appointed to attend the Invercargill meeting arranged to discuss this vexed question. The delegates were given a free hand in regard to settling the question. After the ordinary business had been transacted a social was held, a pleasant couple of hours being spent with song and story. The next general meeting of the sub-branch will be beld at Orawia, on 5th May.

Keen interest is being displayed locally in football this season. Tuatapere has a team entered for the Western District competition. Most of the players are ex-Diggers, and they form a strong combination. A tennis club is also under way, and the ladies have formed a hockey team. The number of returned men in this district is rapidly increasing, there being at present about seventy attached manner gain entrance to the body of an stocks of Kapok, Bedding and Wire Marter to the local only hands. to the local sub-branch.

THE WHEAT PROBLEM.

GREAT SHORTAGE EXPECTED.

The wheat scarcity in New Zealand is very apparent and it is estimated there will be a shortage of 2,000,000 bushels. Wheat is unobtainable in Australia so that we must be on guard for our requirements. The wheat controller states that if there is a shortage of wheat the public must be considered first and poultry will have to be sacrificed. Recently the president, Mr E. J. Ross and the secretary interviewed the wheat controller at Christchurch and laid the matter of poultrymen's requirements before him. He regretted the great shortage and held out very little hope for the supply of poultrymen. He promised whatever assistance he could render. On the question of a standard of pollard he agreed that something should be done and noted with interest the proposals laid before him at Conference. He promised to be in attendance with the Minister of Agriculture in Wellington where the Executive would wait upon him with the remits passed at last Conference. The interview was of a private nature and little is available for publication.

Kennel Notes.

Some difficulty was found in securing a judge for Airedales and Irish Terriers. Mr G. I. Moffett has kindly consented to judge fancy collies, also wire and smooth fox terriers.

As a breeder and exhibitor of rough coated collies, Mr Moffett had marked success, having won in the hottest company when that breed was at its high water mark.

Terriers also were part of his fancy, and breeders will do well to have his opinion of their foxies as he thoroughly understands them and knows what is wanted.

Mr Ben Ellis, a Dunedin fox terrier breeder, has just been on a visit to Invercargill and in a little chat he informed us that he has quite gone out of the breed.

Ben has had some of the best bred stuff procurable in his kennels at some time or other, and we are sorry to know that he is out of the fancy at present, but hope to find him once again in the ring in the near future.

Several gentlemen, quite competent to adjudicate, refused the task, owing to the keenness of competition in these breeds. Eventually Mr Alex. Kidd accepted the task and time will tell whether he is capable or otherwise of giving a right de-

POINTS IN PUPPY PRODUCTION. FACTS ON BREEDING FOR BONE AND BUILD.

(By Will Hally).

It is easy to draw a straight line through life, but how many of us stick to it. In the dog fancy, for instance, how seldom do ideas quite keep pace with ideals; low frequently are intentions and realisations far apart! That is not the blame of the dogs, but of the doggists; and when one secs the methods followed in some kennels, even in those whose owners can hardly be called inexperienced, one causes to wonder that pedestals so long remain unoccupied, that there is dress and debris along even the starry path. I have not been witnessing any particularly inglorious Gaderene descent, but my post-bag is so often the receptacle of other people's disappointments that, believing that prevention is always better than cure, and realising that most of the failures are the failures of canine early life, I give some poins in puppy production. This article was originally meant to be for Chowists only, but on reading it over it struck me that it might be equally well applied to nearly all breeds, and so, white the quantities mentioned in the following are for Chows, that dog being a medium sized canine, each fancier can add to or deduct from those quantities tosuit his own special variety.

The old idea, and a still fairly prevalent one, was to underfeed pregnant animals, but from a long and wide experience of live stock breeding of many kinds, Ihave nothing but vehement condemnation for that misleading action. How can a bitch, for example, maintain her own strength and nourish her expected family at the same time, on less food than if she had only herself to consider? It can't be done, and it has never been done, except in those rare exceptions which are only sufficiently numerous to prove the rule. There is no secret in big-boned, well-built puppies, other than commonsense supplies. To begin with, the breeding animals in a stud should invariably be fit before they are mated. Not fat, and not necessarily in good coat but certainly in good health and in firm condition. Then immediately the bitch is mated she should be well fed on bone and body building foods, and even though under normal conditions she has been in the habit of getting only one meal a day, the expectant mother should always have two meals. A big feed and a coming family are a combined load which no bitch should be asked to carry. A meal sufficient for the twenty-four hours, too, is very apt to lead to digestive upsets, and many tragedies have followed those dislocations which, under different conditions, would be very trifling.

At each of the two meals I give the bitch a teaspoonful of bone-meal-I prefor the refined variety, which is specially put up for dogs and a spoonful of cod liver oil and phosphates. The latter mixture can be got at any chemists. At least one-third of each meal is of meat of some kind; horseflesh suits many breeds, but it is not invariably suitable for Chows, so for them and their kindreds I use wellboiled sheep's head, sheep's paunch, and well boiled fish for the most part. The water in which these have been boiled should be utilised to soak the biscuit food, and then that is mixed, when ready, with the flesh or fish; in that way none of the nourisement is lost. With even animals of one breed, varying in size and in eating capacity, no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down as to quantity, but the two meals combined should be a little for considerably more than the one meal which the bitch was accustomed to in her ordinary, everyday life. Don't be alarmed although she gets broad in he back and put on flesh, so long as it is not simply piggy fat; but the best guide as to whether she is getting the proper amount of food, and beneficial quantities of bone meal and emulsion, is the state of her health and her bowels. Violent exercise must be avoided, but exercise in moderation is a very important item in the pregnant bitch's life, and in the future of her puppies. The tearing around which some dogs so delight in will not do the bitch any harm, so long as she is not being pulled about by her fellows, or colliding with them in play. But exercise is very much a matter of habit, and a Chow, for instance, that has been accustomed to a backyard, can get a lot of exercise there by running up and down its confines.

As bone-meal has a constipating effect, I stop giving it to the bitch ten days or so before her expected family are due to arrive, but I continue the emulsion all the time, and I restart the bone-meal a few deys after the puppies are born, always keeping a wary eye on the condition of the infants. For the last fortnight of her pregnancy the bitch has a daily drink of Lactol or Puppilac, and after her puppies are born, and until they are weamed, she has a daily meal of "Porage" or 'Quaker'' oats, with Lactol or Puppilac. Oatmeal is one of the finest of bone-makers, but the ordinary oatmeal is apt to be indigestible or heating, and so those proare much more satisfactory. Bitches of other than the blunt-nosed breeds very seldom give and trouble in whelping, but they should never be bedded on straw at such a time. Straw or hay beds, when not hard enough to strangle the puppies, frequently lead to rupture, because the bitch cannot get the infants property attended to. Neither should the puppies while with their mother be bedded on hay or straw, as no bitch can keep them thoroughly clean amidst such material.

The bottom of the birth box should be well-padded with newspaper, and then a blanket or soft cloth placed on the top. A waterproof sheet below the blanket is an aid, but I do not like whole bundles of blankets or cloths; these are sure to be scraped about by the bitch, and in their folds a puppy is easily lost, smothered, or over-lain. After the puppies are born, the blanket or cloth should be removed, and a fresh one, previously warmed, should be put in its place. All puppies should be born into a comfortably warm temperature, and should be kept in it for the first three or four weeks of their lives. A chilly atmosphere may not actually kill them, but it will undoubtedly stunt and retard their growth, because much of their nourishment will then be going to keeping out the cold intsead of being used solely for their building. Sometimes pupples given no sign of life when they are born, or they cease to be "alive" shortly after they are born. The little extra labour is producing a big puppy is frequently the cause of this. There are various methods of starting the machinery, such as giving the puppy little raps, or gently pressing the ribs across the chest, so that they exhale and inhale air in their contraction and expansion. Then a tiny drop or two of brandy will usually start things, and it can be safely given.

The rib pressure and rapping I do not recommend, as it has to be very gently done, and I am writing for novices, and not for experts. But if you have no brandy, and even if you have, there is no simpler way of recuperation than by holding the puppy in front of a good fire. If you are afraid of your complexion, you can stick the puppy in the oven, on a soft cloth, but, of course, leave the door ajar. If twenty minutes heating doesn't move the springs, then pop the puppy quickly in and out of a jar of cold water. If that is not effective then you can be fairly certain that the puppy is really dead. The brandy is obviously the simlest method, but it does not always work, especially in those youngsters that waken only to go to sleep again; for them the heating is the only remedy. After all the litter arrive, and are tidied, the bitch should be given a warm gruel drink.

SIMPLIFICATION AND LABOUR SAVING.

Even when we have swept out our superfluous furniture and ornaments, when we have ceased to wear starched shirt-fronts and cuffs (or to allow men to do so) when we have realised that a Japanese kimono is a most graceful garment and of a charming simplicity in shape and stitching, even when we have (as we have not yet) reduced our diet to a simpler and plainer regime, to the edification of our souls and the improvement of our health, there still remains much to be done in a house.

In some directions, modern ideas demand increased activity. At least the calightened among us wash their persons more fully and freely than of yore, and consequently must wash more towels and clean more bath-rooms. And we can scarcely revert to the primitive diet of nuts and fruit, avoiding all cookery.

The trend of modern domestic ideas, however, is towards not only the simplification of living but also the saving of labour in the means of doing it. The wacum cleaner is more effective than the broom, ever was and even in its most clumsy form involves less labour, since it does not spread the dust from the carpet over everything else in the room. In time, electric plugs for driving the vacuum cleaner will be installed in every house when it is built. The gas and electric cooking stoves, the electric iron have already halved the labour of the kitchen are doubled the comfort uith which it is performed.

Nor is it to be supposed that we have as far as we can go on these lines. Invention has many ideas yet in store for the house-wife if she will only profit by them. And to do her justice, she is generally eager to do so. What is wanted is to bring these labour saving devices within the reach of everybody, and ensure their possession and use to every woman who has a home to keep.

Houses also will in future be built with a view to economy of time and energy. No more walking three hundred yards when fifty would suffice, if the house were only planned properly. There is a field of great promise open to women in domestic architecture. Already many in other countries have begun to work in it. Why does one never hear of it as a possible profession for women here?

Why have we in Invercargill so many inconvenient and inartistic houses? Partly because we have too much old stock on hand; largely because we in common with the inhabitants of other towns, have suffered the house-agent in our midst. He has his good points. His system of timepayments has enabled many a family of small or moderate means to buy a home; out when all's said and done, he does not build and sell houses for philanthropy or love of art or enthusiasm for progress. He does it for a living and to make money. Supposing he is honest in his building, he still offends by running up house after house on stock models and minimum areas all over the place. He is not an architect, he is just a man out to make money, from no is just a man out to makemoney, from the chances of life and the stupidity of the public. We shall never solve the housing problem until we re-organise our forces altogether and place the making of the people's homes in the hands of men and women whose first object is not to make profits for themselves. Expert supervision of all domestic architecture will be a prominent feature in the townplanning activities of the future.

And now for that without which these reforms and many desirable innovations yet to be described, cannot be more than dreamed of-co-operation. One woman, two women, a score of women acting separately cannot do what twenty acting together can accomplish. Co-operation is the keynote of modern life; it it the only key that fits the lock of modern problems, separateness is a thing of the past, Jealousy, unwillingness to learn from others, snebbishness, all concomitants, or rather parts and phases of separateness, must go, if we are to grapple with life in this new era. How many excellent housewives in Invercargill would sniff or snort at the idea of the communal kitchen, they think themselves the best cooks in the district and are inordinately proud of the distinction? How many men can never bring themselves to believe that a pancake can be successfully "tossed" by anyone but their own mothers, much less that pan-live without?

There hangs round our necks too, ever and always, a weight of inertia. Having been set in motion according to the tag-cakes are things one really can afford to ditions of the past, the easiest thing is to keep moving in just that direction and at just that pace. It requires force to get out of the groove ousself, and much more force to push others out of it.

Next week we shall consider what may be accomplished in the domestic world by co-operation, and why here as elsewhere, we must co-operate or perish.

Children's Column.

BY "MATER."

DAISY DIMPLE.

"Daisy Dimple" was the darling of her family. They called her Dimple because she just dimpled all over her clubby little face whenever she smiled, and that was very often. Her face was not the only "dimply" part about her either, she had fat dimpled arms, and even dimples at her ankles and knees, which showed quite plainly below her wee petticoats.

Daisy Dimple had everything she could wish for, and, unlike many other little boys and girls who get all they want, s'ie was very unselfish, and, therefore, as happy as it was possible for a little girl to be.

Now, Daisy Dimple was not a lazy little girl, she had far too many "children" to wash and dress, and pretend to feed and put to bed, and to nurse and cuddle, ever to be idle.

But Daisy Dimple thought it was not much use trying to keep a big family in order unless one looked "grown up," and the certainly didn't look as grown up as mother or granny. She supposed that was why her best dolf "Wendy," would not shut her eyes to go to sleep now, as she used to, and why Tommy Atkins would be so unruly and stupid and keep falling over as though guns were being fired at him.

How could she expect her family to obey her if she wasn't a real grown up mother? So very quietly she tip-toed up to grandmamma's room and looked in the cupboard, and there she saw a box nearly as big as herself. Daisy Dimple dragged the hox out and opened it. Carefully removing several pieces of "rustly" tissue paper she saw just the very thing she needed to make her look as grown up as granny.

It was a large coal scuttle of purple velvet, with two black and two lavender coloured feathers in it fastened in a bunch to the front of the crown.

Daisy Dimple's eyes grew large and round, and she held her breath and clasped her dimpled hands as she gazed at the glorious bonnet.

Then she took it from its rustling wrappings, and placed it on her golden curls. With a half smile and a feeling of great importance she picked up granny's hand-glass and looked in.

"Don't I look 'grow'd up?" she asked herself, as she balanced the bonnet on her head, steadying it with one hand. You see the glass did not show Daisy Dimple her short frock, tiny socks, and stretch of bare dimpled leg between, so, entirely satisfied, that she was now 'grow'd up' he went back to the nursery to over-awe, and claim obedience from her tiresome children.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

THE CHILDREN.

The house that has the children is the house that has the joy in it,

To me 'tis only home'that has a girleen or a boy in it.

An' every one that's added only makes the place the cheerier;

If childher are the gifts of God, the more Ho sends the merrier. Sure, every little one I've had gave something to my bliss the more,

An' every little baby face my lips were drawn to kiss the more,

An' though I know how the trouble an' the thrial and the care they are, An' though I know how often wild, how wayward an' how quare they are An' though 'tis many a night I've watched besids the little beds of them.

An' held their little hands and cooled the levered little heads of them, An' though I know the surly moods

that fell upon the best of them Can one who is unkind ontweigh the love of all the rest of them?

No, no, the trouble that I've had, through them, I'll never rue at all, An' sure, without the childher now, I don't know what I'd do at all.

Mother: "In disobeying me you were doing wrong and Ihave punished you to impress it on your mind."

Son and Heir (between sobs): "Aren't you mistaken, mummy, in regard to the location of my mind?"

PASTRY.

Rough Puff Pastry :- Half pound flour, box lard, a pinch of salt, one dessertspoonfur lemon juice, cold water. Sieve the flour and salt on to a pastry board or a marble slab. Cut the lard into pieces about an inch square; roll in the flour, and place on one side. Make a well in the centre of the flour, put in the lemon juice and a little water, and mix into a smooth paste, adding more water as necessary. Knead thoroughly, roll out, place the pieces of lard on it, fold in, and rell into a thin strip. Flour lightly, and fola in three, press the edges together, and turn the fold towards the right hand; proceed in the same way until the pastry has had four rolls and four folds. Roll out again- to the size required, and use either for meat pies or tartlets. For mince pies roll out thinly, cut out with a round cutter, slightly larger than the patty pan used, line some patty pans with the pastry. Fill with mincemeat, slightly damp the edges, put on a cover of pastry, knock up and scollop the edges, and place en a baking sheet, and bake in a hot oven 15 minutes to 20 minutes.

Short Crusty Pastry.— Hair pound of he spent the fleur, 20z of dripping, half a teaspoonful of baking powder, cold water to mix, a pinch of salt. Sieve the flour, salt and baking powder into a basin, rub in the fat, and mix all to a stiff dough with the water. Flour a board and rolling punchastic. Flour a board and rolling punchastic period by the sensibility.

Roll out the pastry to the required thickness, and use for meat pies, tarts, etc.

Potato Pastry.— Half pound of mashed petatoes fine and dry, 4oz of flour, or flour and fine oatmeal, 1½oz of dripping, one teaspoonful of baking powder, salt. Mix the flour, salt and baking powder; rub in the dripping. Add the potatoes; and mix well lightly. Make a stiff paste with cold water. Flour a board, and roll out ½ inch thick. It should be baked in a quick oven.

French Pastries.— French pastries are made by making various fancy shapes of puff pastry, and placing jam, chopped nuts or anything light upon them. In some cases they are made into square tartlets. and the inside filled with one or two cherries, and syrup poured after they are cooked, or an apricot covered with syrup (made of sugar and water), or the apricot syrup and sugar. Another method of making them is to bake Genoese pastry in a Yorkshire pudding tin or on a baking sleet. When cooked this can be cut into various fancy shapes, either diamond shape, in rounds or into triangles. They can be cut in half, and jam or butter icing spread between them; the tops are either ited with white or any coloured glace or chocolate icing, or spread with icing, and a small design piped round with a forcer; or they can be painted over with jam, rubbed through a sieve and chopped nuts or desiccated cocoanut sprinkled over.

The largest sheet or pane of glass in the world is set in the front of a building on Vine street, Cincinnati, Ohio. It was made in Marseilles, France, and measures 186in by 104in.

FAMOUS HYMNS.

THE STRANGE WAYS IN WHICH SOME WERE WRITTEN.

William Cowper, who was responsible for a large number of hymns, was once promised a post as clerk of the Journal to the House of Lords, and was happy in the contemplation of his approaching appointment when, to his utter dismay, he learned that it would be necessary to undergo a public examination before the House before he entered upon his duties. As the time drew nigh his agony became more and more intense, and he made up his mind to commit suicide. On the day before his public appearance was to be made he threw himself into his coach and ordered the man to drive to the Tower Wharf intending to throw himself into the river.

Fill with mincement, slightly amp the edges, put on a cover of pastry, making sheet, and bake in a hot oven is minutes to 20 minutes.

Short Crusty Pastry.— Half pound of the line water, he found a porter seated upon some goods. He returned to the coach and was conveyed to his lodgings at the Temple. He shut the doors and threw himself upon an open knife, but the blade broke. At this time some friends came to see him, and he concealed his agitation. As soon as he was lett alone a change came over him, and so detestable did his intentions appear that he provided the second state of the day in heavy in-

All night he slept, but at daybreak he arose, and, in one of those fits of contrition that appeared to have followed on every period of his madness, he wrote that hymn that has since become so well-known, "God moves in a mysterious way."

"Abide with me" was written at the little fishing port of Brixham, on the shores of Torbay, and was Henry Francis Lyte's last composition. In 1847 Mr Lyte became so weak and ill that the doctors ordered his removal to Nice. The evening of the Sunday prior to his departure was a beautiful one, and after service he left hi: house and strolled, as was his custom, down the garden path to the sea shore. An hour later he presented his family with the famous hymn.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

Apart from the great beauty of "Our Blest Redeemer ere He Breathed His tender last farewell," the hymn is remarkable from the fact that the authoress, Harriet Auber, first wrote it on a pane of glass in a window of her house at Hoddesdon.

"Christians, akake, salute the happy morn," has been a favourite Christmas hymn for more than 150 years. John Byrom, the author, wrote it for his favourite little daughter, Dolly, who found it one Christmas morning awaiting her with other presents.

"There is a Happy Land" was written by Andrew Young in 1838. He happened during that year, to be spending his holiday in Rothesay, and one day passed the afternoon in the house of a friend. A little girl began to play a little Indian melody on the piano, and Mr Young, who was passionately fond of music, begged her to play it again, remarking that it would make a capital tune for a children's hymn. That night the tune still haunted him, and early in the morning he ross, and, while walking in the garden, wroth the hymn.

Pasture Notes.

(BY E. BRUCE LEVY.)

ASSISTANT BIOLOGIST, WERAROA STATE FARM.

GRASSING OF FERN LANDS.

(Continued from our last issue.) A good temporary pasture would be: Italian Rye ... ... ... 25lb. ... ... ... 6lb. Red Clover Oats or Barley ... ... 12bus.

and a permanent pasture :--

Cocksfoot	 		• • •	15lb
Perennial ryegrass	• • •		•••	8 1b
Crested dogstail	• • •			6lb
Timothy	 • • •		•••	3ibs.
Red Clover	 			3lb.
White Clover	 	,		11b.

Such a permanement pasture is suited for poorer country where perennial ryegrass will not hold on more than three years: On better land a good style of permanent pasture to adopt is somewhat as follows:

Cocksfoot	 	 	12Ib.
Perennial Rye	 	 	15lb.
•			4Ib.
	 	 	3lb.
Red Clover	 	 	3lb.
Alsike			21b.
White Clover		 	2lb.
11 22200 030102

On heavier wetter land Meadow Foxtail and Poa trivialis shoul be included, and the Cocksfoot and Dogstail reduced:

Cockstoot	,				6lb.
Perennial Rye		•••			15lb.
Timothy
Meadow Fextail					4}b.
Poa trivialis			• • •		2lb.
Red Clover				• • •	21b.
Alsike					31b.
White Clover					2lb.
Lotus Major			,,,		1lb.

If, on a short rotation pasture, Perennial Rycgress proves the most profitable in any one particular district, then sow down a short rotation pasture mixture:--

Perennial Rye ... ... ... 25lb. Red Clover ... ... ... 616.

It is the practice to add to such a mixture a few pounds of Cocksfoot, but it is very doubtful if this practice is sound. A sprinkling of cocksfoot plants will result, which will virtually decide the farmer to keep the pasture going for another year. It has been stated that the Cocksfoot is put in purely as a guard against grass grub attack.

TRANSITIONS AND MANAGEMENT OF COCKSFOOT PASTURES:

Cocksfoot is without doubt the king of the grasses, and its extended use for permanent pasture work is highly desired. The grass certainly has several rather grave defects, but with just a little care in the management of cocksfoot pastures these may be to a large extent eliminated. Cocksfoot is a tussock, and one of the objects to aim at is to suppress this character and so produce a continuous turf without and interspaces. The second object is to keep the clovers in the pasture. I look upon the clover elementparticularly White Clover- as extremely important, for not only does the clover serve as an index as to how hard the pasture should be grazed, but the beneficial ceffet of the companionship is extrememarked. Whether or not this is due to the effect the clover has on keeping the soil surface shaded and moist or whether it is a more or less symbiotic relation, the clover, by virtue of its root nodules, is as it were loading the ground with available nitrates which may be utilised by the Cocksfoot plants.

Cocksfoot will not be permanent under ail conditions of farm management, par ticularly on hillside country. This is amply demonstrated at the present time on the cockstoot country of Akaroa. Here within a short radius, the effect of different methods of treatment is very plain. Where the cocksfoot has not been stocked at all there is a pure association of cocksfoot, showing good growth at the present time but with a large amount of dry herbage at the base. The areas where cocksfoot has been lightly grazed excellent pasture of cocksfoot clover is present. Again, where the clover has not been allowed to persist through constant and heavy stocking the pasture is giving place to bare ground, into which such weeds as catsear, ribgress, and field daisy are gaining entry. In such paddocks on the very bare knolls danthonia is also making its appearance, and again in those pastures which have apparently been grazed continually for the last ten years or so the cocksfoot has virtually run out together and the pasture now consists of a pure association of danthonia pilosa.

There is no doubt but that the danthonia turf is inferior to the cocksfootclover sward, and therefore this transition must be looked upon as undesirable on this type of country. It must be borne in mind, however, that had the danthonia not been there to take up the running, the area would have in all probabilty reverted to fern. The following are some of the successions likely to take place in cocksfoot pastures :--

Cocksfoot to Agrostis. Cocksfoot to ribgrass, catsear, field daisy.

Cocksfoot to sweet vernal, hairgrass, thence to danthonia ..

The question is how are these successions to be avoided?

(1)--By sowing down with the cocksfoot suitable grasses and clovers;

(2-By so regulating stock as to keep the clovers in the pastures; (3)—By application of artificial manure primarily to this same end; (4)—By refraining from having cocks-

(5)—By surface sowing of clover seed; (6)-By not allowing the clover growth to get too far away before stocking.

FORESTRY.

The usual fortnightly meeting of Court Star of the South was held on Thursday evening, and was presided over by Chief Ranger Brother A. W. Jones, when there was a full complement of officers and a large attendance of members. During the evening one new member was impressively initiated by the members of the Court. Very interesting reports were received from the following delegates who attended the District Meeting held at Balclutha at Easter :- P.C.R. G. Woods, W. Fénn, W. Sampson, R. Folley, and C. W. Patton. Their feports went to show that the Otago district had made great strides during the past year. No less than 510 members were initiated and allowing for the loss by death and arrears a net gain was made of 323 members. The funds have also been substantially increased and now amount to nearly £76,000. During the year £3,300 was paid out in sick pay and £860 in funeral claims and £72 in relief to members. It has now been decided to pay the major part of the contributions of all male members reaching the age of 65 years and female members reaching the age of 60

The Challenge Shield was won by Court Heriot who made 78 per cent increase in their membership for the year, the Bluff came second with 47 per cent increase.

The Juvenile report showed a membership of 279 at the end of the year. The adult courts have made a steady gain from the juvenile courts as 580 transfers to the senior court, have been made since the establishment of the juvenile courts.

The delegates spoke very highly of the hospitality shown them by the Balclotha brethern and a special vote of thanks was

SOUTHLAND LAW SOCIETY

AND THE "WAIT AND SEE" POLICY

The "wait and see" policy seems to be an essential part of various phases of our activities. We have in previous issues dealt with other phases of the use of 11 is policy, but it is now associated with other characteristics: namely "That of obtaining information from another part of the Dominion as to what they are doing before we do anything ourselves. The latest application of this policy is the Southland Law Society who allowed intervals of months to elapse before even replying to a letter from the R.S.A., asking for a reduction in the cost of conveyancing fees

In addition to this, application was made to the N.Z. Law Society, asking for a ruling on the matter, as indirected in the president's letter dated November 19th., 1919. The secretary has now received a letter from the Society stating that they were referring the matter to the Otago and Canterbury Law Societies to ascertain what is the practise in those

In this later communication the .w Zealand Law Society has apparently been thrown overboard. It would be interesting to know whether or not the parent lody left this matter to the discretion of the local society, who are now waiting to see what others are doing. Surely the local society has sufficient grip of its affairs to decide its action in this matter. There has been a lack of decision right through, and the local R.S.A. have been kept in doubt on a matter which affects every returned man throughout South-

Special attention is drawn to the dates of the various communications and every reasonable person will surely admit that the society should have replied at an earlier date instead of adopting the "wait and see" policy. The whole of the correspondence is published for general information.

RE CONVEYANCING SCALE

Dear Sir .-- At a meeting of Invercargill practitioners held immediately prior to the Easter vacation, the question of conveyancing charges to returned soldiers was again considered. It was resolved that the Otago and Canterbury Law Societies be approached with a view to ascertaining the practice in those districts. This being done, and immediately replies come to hand, the matter will be considered again by the local Society. Your Association will then be advised whether any alteration is to be made locally.-Yours faithfully,

SCIENCE NOTES.

SOME USES OF WOOD.

Here are some of the strange uses made of wood and its by-products, recently exhibited by the American State College of Forestry:-"Silk" sox, made from wood fibre, which look like silk, feel like silk, but are far cheaper, than the real thing. Sawdust sausage casings, in which wood is converted by chemical processes into viscose. Wood-flour phonograph records compressed under enormous power, to help make music from sawdust. Tanbark shingles, made from the waste hemlock bark, after it has been through the tannery, and lastly, paper milk-bottles.

MICROSCOPE OF ENORMOUS POWER

Seated in the Council Chamber of the India Office, recently an audience watched the growth of a plant and the effects of various stimulants upon it, as recorded upon a screen by a cresscograph. latter is the invention of Sir Jagadis Chandra Bose, the Indian savant, who gave the demonstration. The crescograph is composed of a single magnetic lever which by its movements rotates a delicately poised astatic needle actuating a small mirror. This causes a spot of light to be reflected upon the screen, giving a magnification of from one million to a hundred million times. A tree contracted, the lecturer declared, when struck, much as an animal would contract its muscles, while even inorganic matter was more or less responsive. Upon the goom being darkened a mysterious "hook" of light passed rapidly across the screen. showed the actual growth of a plant as projected from the crescographic mirror. Subsequently, the "hook" reappeared, shiwed down in its course across the screen and finally balted. This, as the lecturer said, illustrated the effect of electricity upon the plant, too great a power having an opposite effect to the stimulation afforded by a reasonable amount. Particularly interesting was a record showing the curiously erratic effects in the growth of a plant caused by the use

A NEW "KEY" INDUSTRY

The Nitrogen Products Committee, appointed in England in 1916, have advised the starting of operations for nitrogen fixation and allied processes on an industrial scale. The committee recommends the establishment of the cyanamide process, to an annual output of 60,000 tons, without delay, Calcium carbide, which is used in this process, at 800-900deg. C absorbs nitrogen--obtained from the fractional distillation of air-to the extent of about 20 per cent., the product being technically termed cyanamide. This is a valuable fertiliser, but by treatment with steam yields its nitrogen as ammonia, which may then be fixed as sulphate, or, by passing with air over platinum gauze, be converted to nitric acid and other ects. The committee also recommends too establishment of a synthetic ammonia plant with an output of 10,000 tons of ammonia per annum. This process is effected by catalysing a mixwith the synthetic ammonia plant, an ammonia oxidation plant should be erected equal to 10,000 tons of 95 per cent. nitric acid or the equivalent of nitrates per year. Every encouragement, moreover, should be given to the more complete recovery of ammonia from all existing carbonisation processes and to the diminished use of raw coal.

TREASURE FROM THE OCEAN.

The ocean is indeed an infinite treasure house of living gold in the diverse flora a nd fauna which it contains. Some time ago the French scientist, M. A. Chatelier made a study of the marine plants capable of being used as a source of cellulose and paper. More recently M. P. Gloess has shown in the "Bulletin" of the Oceanographic Institute that such plants can be used in general for fertilisers and as sources of nitrogen, potassium, phosphate, oleomargarine, etc. He also treats of the Zosteres from which cellulose and paper can be made withta by-product of a fertiliser containing both nitrogen and potassium. He next speaks of the red algae or Florideae from which agar-agar is extracted. But the largest part of his article is devoted to the brown algae from which the foodstuff algine can be extracted, while both this and the alginates can be used in industry for various purposes as a mordant.

ANNUALS.

Some good annuals to sow now are as Antirrhinums (snapdragons). - These should be found in every garden. There are dwarf, medium and tall varieties, being respectively about nine, eighteen and thirty-six inches high. The colours of some of the newer strains are most varied and beautiful, and a bed of well grown plants will continue in bloom for many weeks.

Candytuft.—There are rarely seen at their best unless they are sown in the open. For massing as an early spring flower they are unequalled, and some of the later varieties Nave immense spikes of flowers, the plants growing from nine inches to eighteen inches high.

Clarkia .-- These are seldom seen, but seed sown in the autumn produces plants that will grow two feet six inches to three feet high, and which will carry immense spikes of bloom. Firefly and salmon beauty are two varieties that should be grown by every y. decorative purposes they are unequalled.

Coreopsis .-- Without this genus of plants our borders would often be very dull, but easily grown, their bright vellow and brown flowers are among the showiest plants we have. They are unequalled for cutting purposes, and will bloom over a very long period. They vary according to variety from nine inches to three feet in height.

Dianthus. - These are very bright and showy flowers and in form are like carnations, of which they are a variety. The plants are about one foot high.

Dimorphothecas .- . This takes a prominent position in our gardens. They are of easy culture, and will succeed in almost any soil. They need to be planted in a very sunny position. D. Aurantiaca has flowers of a brilliant orange gold colour, in form similar to a maguerite. The hybrids vary from white to reddish and bluish white tints, and are very pretty. They grow about one foot high.

Gypsophilia Elegans .-- This is well worth growing for its value for mixing with other cut flowers. Mixed with sweet peas it is delightful. The plants should be allowed the space of a foot or more between them. The plant grows about eighteen inches high. If successive sowings of this are made it is possible to have it in flower most months of the year.

Mignonette.- Most people know this, in fact, we should not be wrong in saying that everyone knows this delightful old-fashioned sweet scented annual. is not altogether an easy subject to grow in Southland but with good treatment it can be done well. plants plenty of well rotted manure, sow in autumn; thin out seedlings to at least six inches apart. Seedlings will transplant if weather is dull and moist, but as a general rule, mignonette is a ture of hydrogen and nitrogen under bad subject to transplant, and failures a considerable pressure. In conjunction are very frequent. The best procedure is to sow the seed thinly and to thin out the seedlings when large enough.

THIS IS LAW.

A water company in Florida was being prosecuted on the charge of furnishing water unfit for ordinary domestic purposes to the public. A lady consumer was a witness for the state. After stating her name, residence, etc., she was asked:

Prosecutor: Do you use this water on your lawn?

Witness: No, sir.

Prosecutor: Why do you not?

Counsel for defendant objected on the ground that the witness's reason did not constitute evidence, and that it was irrelevant, immaterial, incompetent, etc.

The jury was instructed by the court to retire from the room and the point was exhaustively argued pro and con.

The Court decided that the question was proper, overruled the objection of counsel for defendant and noted the exception. The jury instructed the witness to answer the question.

Witness: I haven't got any lawn,

MOTORING ROTES.

SWANK.

There are not a few drivers in Invercargill who are a danger to the public. Leaning back on the cushion, their knees up about their chin, accelerator pressed down, what chance have they of acting in an emergency? It is high time we had an inspector to prohibit "swank" and secure at least safe driving.

REPATRIATION.

Many returned soldiers have been started on a course of hotor-engineering by the Repatriation Department, and it is pleasing to note that positions have been found for soldier mechanics in our local garages. The men are picking up the work well and hitherto unskilled workmen will eventually become very handy about the gar-

PETROL SHORTAGE.

The present petrol shortage has caused the Board of Trade to examine the oil deposits of New Zealand with a view to future development. It is certain that America cannot long continue to supply us with ample fuel, and so there are those who believe that the New Plymouth bores are not by any means the proved failure that some would have us believe. It is reported that a number of motor lorries ar running on fuel derived from a Taranaki oil well.

MOTOR CYCLES.

The nerve racking noises made by motor cyclists in the streets of the town were mentioned at the last meeting of the Palmerston North Borough Council. Mayor remarked that when the by-law came into force at the end of the next month the noise would be stopped. He felt convinced that the police would get a dozen convictions in the main street the next day. Our local authorities should act likewise and so banish the nuisance.

GEAR CHANGING.

How few motorists really master the art of gear-changing. It is a fine thing to effect a change at the right moment, and without jar or sound. Nowadays the high horse-power of cars and the almost perfect change of speeds system renders a change so seldomm that the motorist does not really get the same practice as was the case with earlier models. Yet it is an art that will pay the purchaser of any car to learn thoroughly.

Wear and tear of the transmission system and all gear trouble may be wholly laid to faulty gear changing. Let the motorist pause to think that the teeth of two separate pinions cannot be forced into mesh, but must be allowed to engage without unnecessary wear and tear and he would give a little more attention to his gear-changing. What a pleasure it is to both driver and passengers to see the change slip from one speed to another and not to hear the ground and crash that so often grates on the ear as one hears cars

THE CAUSE OF ACCIDENTS.

A fruitful cause of motor accidents, says a critic, is the tendency of inexperienced beginners to purchase highwered cars. They quickly master the cering and general within the first month they are careering along at a speed which rivals even that of an expert. Having failed, however, to serve their novitiate on slower cars, they have not gained that instinctive capacity for instant action which is essential in case of sudden emergency. quently, when this emergency arises, they either lose their heads completely or else pause for an appreciable interval before deciding what to do. The majority of accidents arise from this cause. For this reason it should be urged on all beginners to adopt as their motto "Festina lente" and make a start on a small car of moderate horse-power.

GARDEN NOTES.

ONIONS.

Most crops are harvested before now, but there are sure to be some backward erops. Rain following a dry spell may make available fertilizers that were mert for want of sufficient mosture, and this may lead to late growth and consequent delay in ripening-off. An overplus of fertilizer may have this effect without interference by the weather. If the bulbs are properly grown the necks should become thin and lose substance, and the tops fall over from their own weight. If this does not occur the bulbs have not finished properly, and they will not be good keepers. The cause may be too much manure, untimely rain, or an unsuitable variety; or, lastly, they may have been lifted too early. Giant varieties should be sown in autamn; if sown in spring they will not finish properly. Ripening occurs earlier in some places than in others, but in cases where the tops have not withered lifting should be left till March in order to give the bulbs a chance to finish ripen-

TURNIPS.

Where the winter supply is of consequence it is a good plan to sow two varieties at this time-Snowball or a simlar white variety for first use, and Golden Ball or Orange Jelly for later. The yellow varieties stand better through winter than the whites, and are at that season better in flavour. The yollow variety should be well thinned, as they are to stand. Thinning the white variety is mostly done when roots are pulled for use or market. This enables the taking of a large crop from the ground, and is the usual method of market-gardeners.

CELERY.

Late crops should be moulded up; they are better so than exposed to winter weather. The moulding-up protects them from heavy rain, the heads keep better, and are gaining crispness. Celery leafspot is causing losses as usual. Losses would be smaller if growers realized the early beginning of the disease. A very frequent cause is infected seed. When this is the case the disease attacks the seedling plants, but at this stage it may not be noticed unless it is looked for. Later on, when the disease has obtained a firm hold, it may be impossible to save the plants; certainly, badly affected leaves cannot be saved. Spraying with bordeaux mixture should begin with the seedlings and be continued as long as may be necessary. Growers are known to obtain complete control by this means. Some authorities state that the spores of the disease present on seeds die within two years, and advise that seeds less than two years old should not be used. The seeds retain vitality for eight years. The fungus may be killed by steeping the seed for a period of three hours inadilute solution of part formalin to 600 parts of water. The seeds should afterwards be quickly dried on sheets of blotting paper.

Autumn sowing of cauliflower, cabbage, nion, and lettuce: These seeds should be sown during the last week of March or early in April. This sowing is one of the most important operations of the whole year, particularly so in reference to cauliflower, cabbage, and lettuce, because it provides for the spring crops, the most valuable of all both to the market gardener and the private grower. Two kinds of cauliflower should be sown-Early Snowball or Early Paris for first cutting, and one of the Autumn Giant types for succession. In the warmer parts of the Dominion another lot may be sown about 1st May, and the combined sowings will carry the supply till the New Year. Heads from the first sowing should be ready during September, a month earlier than in other parts, rendering the growing of broccoli almost unnecessary. This is a great advantage, as broccoli has to be planted in summer, when the moth may make it impossible to grow it.

With onions autumn sowing applies most properly to the giant kinds. These cannot be brought to maturity if sown in spring. The young plants must be transplanted in spring, 12lb of seed will provide plants for an acre. In some circumstances it is advisable to sow the smaller keeping kinds in autumn. In some districts mildew attacks the plants early in the year, and this prevents the bulbs maturing in a proper manner. By sowing in autumn the plants are so far advanced in growth when the disease attacks them that they suffer little or no injury. It is not absolutely necessary to transplant these kinds in spring-in fact, many growers do not. There is, however, greater risk of the plants bolting to seed when not transplanted, and in some cases the ground becomes so weedy during the winter months that transplanting to clean ground becomes imperative. The small kinds being planted closer than the large varieties, 21b of seed should be sown to plant an acre. If not transplanted, 3lb will sow an acre.

SHORT STORIES.

TROUBLE AND SQUEAK.

In these go-ahead times people are apt to sneer at old-fashioned methods but a better method than slipping under the seat when one has lost one's railway ticket has yet to be devised., And that was the course that William Brown, who found himself in this plight, took.

At the moment the ticket-collector arrived, however, the concealed man gave vent to an extraordinary sound—a sort of compound of a groan, a bellow, and a shriek-was, of course, detected, and made to pay full fare.

Well, Bob," he explained, in reply to his companion's heated demand to know why he had made such an egregious ass of himself, "ye see, just as the ticket chap came, I had a shocking cramp, and I just had to wriggle. I was afraid he'd see me. 'But he'll think 'tis a mouse,' says I to myself, 'If I squeak.' So I squeaked.

Mr X., a prominent lawyer, was much addicted to the habit of lecturing his clerks, the office-boy coming in for an unusual share of admonition whenever occasion called for it, and sometimes when it did not. That his words were appreciated was made quite evident to Mr X. one day when a conversation between his and another office-boy on the same floor was repeated to him.

"Watcher wages?" asked the other boy. "I get two thousand pounds a year," said Mr X.'s lad.

"I don't think!" ejaculated the other boy derisively.

"Honest I do," said Tommy - "fifteen bob a week in cash, and the rest in legal advice!"

The village grocer had been drumming into his new apprentice his views on the virtue of economy, until the boy had bad rather enought of it.

At last a fly settled on the sugar, and the grocer deftly caught it, and threw it

"Wasn't that rather wasteful, sir?" inquired the boy meekly. "You throw that fly away without brushing the sugar

Tommy was spending his holidays with his little friend. At bedtime it was discovered that he had forgotten to bring his pyjamas.

"Never mind, Tommy, I will lend you one of Freddy's nightgowns," said Fred-

"I won't sleep in it," said Tommy. "Oh yes, dear, I am sure you will." "No," said Tommy, "before I sleep in a nightgown I'll go to bed raw."

The teacher was giving a lesson on phy-

There was silence for a moment: then a small hand waved in the air.

"Well, tell me, Tommy" said the Tommy answered, "Please, ma'am, my spinal column is a little thing that runs up and down me back; me head sits on one end and I sit on the other." They were two kind-hearted Irishmen who sat beside an old log cabin. Mike, sitting on an old box, looked very sad, whilst Pat, over opposite, was crying piteously. After a dreadful silence Mike spoke

"And what are ye crying for, Pat?"

After a pause came the reply: "Poor old Barney's sent me his photograph and every time I look at it it makes me think of all the dear ould faces I used to shake hands with."

An Irishman more patriotic than clever, enlisted in a Dragoon regiment, with the intention of becoming a gallant soldier.

The fencing instructor had experienced rather a difficult job in the matter of explaining to him the various ways of using

"Now," he said, "how would you use the sword if your opponent feinted?" "Bedad!" said Pat, with gleaming eyes, "I'd just tickle him with the point to sec if he was shamming!"

The nurse on duty in a hospital was giving the little ones their last meal for the day. All save one were patiently awaiting their turn to be served; the one in question being a rosy-cheeked convalescent who was lustily calling for her portion. The nurse was a Cockney who had not yet become quite sure of her aspirates.

"Haren't you a little himpatient, Florence?" inquired the nurse, with just a tone of correction in her voice.

"No, I'm not!" returned Florence, promptly. "I'm a little her patient!"

WHERE IS THE REAL ENEMY

Just now Europe hardly does credit to its intelligence. It is torn and tortured in a monstrous embroil, which a little wise and patient investigation and treatment might, at any rate, have modified, and possibly prevented altogether. The war is quite certainly not a root out of dry ground. Both our own and others' implication in it is not an accident. It is the ostensible and inevitable result of a direction of view, a quality of life, a cultivation of tone, a kind of ideal, which belong to the present type of European civilisation-the present type of European man and mind. The tree is to be known by its fruits, and the fruits are patiently unlikeable. In the process of evolution we have manifestly only reached that stage where it is possible for such disturbances to occur. It is as easy as it is inaccurate to put all this embroglio down at the door of Prussian Junkerdom. The actual form that the mischief has taken-red slaughter-may have been largely decided in that quarter, but the tendencies out of which it all sprang and the soil in which it has so horribly flourished, are general all over the continent.

From Zeno down to Emerson, and even from remoter exponents to possibly more recent ones, moralists have persistently argued that no one can harm us but ourselves. In an ancient and complex civilisation like ours that might be very difficult to prove; but, all the same, the curses which afflict us, and out of which our disasters come, are to be found at least within the compass of humanity. "A. man's foes are they of his own household." They are contributed by human temperament and sustained by human consent. We must have been harbouring cause, or the result could not have transpired. It has been coarsely said that it would take Omnipotence itself to prevent an explosion with a million tons of gunpowder on the premises; but there is a more subtle combustibility than gunpowder-the thought atmosphere of a nation; and until that, with all that is involved in it, is appreciated, understood, and either cured or corrected, these ghastly demonstrations of fury will not be placed securely outside the pale of the possible.

Now, perhaps, the most readily recognisable contributory cause of our disaster is what may be called National Ambition to acquire and control. The lust of power which battens on possession is still a dominating factor in all our modern civilisations. We measure our importance largely by the number of acres we occupy, and the millions of population that we can compel to acknowledge our sway. The loss of a strip of territory, we think, would mean a loss of prestige; we should shrink with the shrinkage of our domain. It is true that this doctrine in its explicit form, is not universally held by the proletariat of this or any other country, but it does take very definite shape in the minds of those who are officially concerned in administration. There is a fierce tenacity of possession and a constant set of ambition that way. Our claim is based on the apparently undeniable fact that we are the best colonisers in the world. Germany's claim is based on her conviction, or the conviction of her rulers, that world-wide "Kultur" is an absolute necessity for human redemption. From time to time, valiant attempts are made to justify this ambition, to interpret its possible harmfulness away. We say, that it is for the good of the world that it should come under our aegis-that races discover that their best interests are served by their suzerainty. They are freer, happier, more productive, wealthier. It is also so much towards the final solidarity of mankind. All which may be quite honestly believed and more or less accurate. It does not, however, transform this national ambition forthwith into a beautiful and transparent henevolence. There is that in man which cannot resist the seeming fascination of the "far-flung banner5, and the allegiance of another annexed tribe of people.

"I am monarch of all I survey, My right there is none to dispute, From the centre of all round to the sea, I am Lord of the fowl and the brute."

is far too inveterate. A nobleman, recently deceased, once stood in his drawing room and said: "I will possess all the lands I can see from here through the window." He made the boast good and died an unsatisfied man.

And it does not take very long to discover that this ambition rests upon dangerous self-ignorance, self-mistrust and one of the sorriest of faccacies. Both physically and psyshologically, it is foredoomed to failure. It must physically for the simple reason that there is only so much territory on this earth to be acquired; and when the last acre of hinterland is absorbed in the dominant empire, and the last Sout. Sea rocklet crowned by been steadily contered for by all great now I forget what it was."

the flag then the hunger which has driven it thus far will begin to hurt. We are nursing an insatiable serpent, and when there is no more pabulum-what then.

And disaster lies upon the road because there always happens to be more then one competitor with this ravenous ambition-and, withal, the same plausible explanation for it. This planet is not big enough for the ambition of a single king; and when there are two or more there is nothing so certain as war, sometime or another. We may have been pursuing this pathway of national aggrandisement and expansion with perfect guilelessness, but,

nevertheless, it has all the time led straight to a clash of interests and an ulti-

For, with perfect consistency, the protection of physical possessions necessitates the use of physical weapons. You can only defend your material frontier with the sword. Intellectual and moral assets

you can defend with the more refined forces of the mind. Political convictions can be fought for on the platform, and in the forum, with all the arts of persuasion and invective; but, so long as nations are propertied concerns, some form of national or international "arm" will have to be employed in their defence. That is where the present type of empire leads us-

straight on to the rocks of a physical im-

And psychologically, of course, the impasse is still more pronounced and poignant. We cannot appease desire with material things, or even the power that they represent. There is a weird pathos about this incessantly asserted appetite. Feed

a hungry man with bread and in due time he will cry out "enough"; give the lungs air and they will cease automatically to inspire, and expire; give thirst-water and it will be quenched. But crowd lands and dominions and empires upon this inner craving, and it will be left at the finish even worse off than at the beginning. The old adage "The appetite grows upon what it feeds upon," does not apply here, for the truth is desire is not to feed at all with these things that we touch and handle-these broad acres and looming distances. That has been the mistake that humanity has made all along.

It has offered a stone for bread. The force that emerges in life as desire is as desire is as vehement as it is in its demand to-day because it has gone hungry through long centuries. The banquet offered has not been to its liking or of its kind. We have left it starving because we have looked in the wrong direction for its provendallegorical form, lies behind the Jesian rejection of Satan's offer of all the kingdoms of the world and that later declaration, "My kingdom is not of this world."

The Master of Men knew the quality of His own claim, and turned away from the ponderable and palatable to the secret infinite of the spiritual world. Desire is not wrong, not a disease. It is as right as the power of vision and the love of light;

but it recoils in wholesome aversion from these cheap and pink comestibles of sense,

and still waits with unsilencable appeal for that which eye hath not seen nor ear heard. With all the long, long series of efforts to quell this desire with material acquisition it ought to have been borne in upon the world's thought that there was something seriously wrong with its method. It is unthinkable that humanity should have been wrought out to the galling anti-climax of an ever increasing demand with an ever decreasing supply, only to be faced at last with the cessation of supply and the maximum of demand.

The thing is inherently ridiculous, and almost proclaims the process of evolution

an insanity, if it be so. Alexander sitting down to weep because there are no

And here in the writer's opinion is the key to the modern world's almost universal malady. Never was an age in which so much was done and provided for the satisfaction of life. Singers sing to it;

players play to it; jackanapes dance before it to amuse it, tinsel glitters all round

it; it is screamed at from the temples of pleasure; it is dazzled by the emblazonment of the sensual; amazons of alcoholic liquor are poured out for its consumption.

The raw material is flung to its devouring lust with pitiable profligacy, until the sins of Sodom are like to blush for very moderation. But all to no purpose. It only awakens with the day to new appeal.

The worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. We may go on until the whole world is one vast organised feast and revel, until empires have waxed and swok-

len to the very consumption of splendour

and extent; but the morrow will be as spiritual thinkers for two thousand years; that man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things which he possesses, or acquires or controls or absorbs; that this attempted investment of self in our environment, the projection of our value into material forms, is altogether a mistaken praxis; nay, that it is never really accomplished at all, that it is mere delusion. Actual possession only comes by complete incorporation and incorporation of material things in spiritual power that craves is an impossibility.

The greatest and the best man that this world ever knew was a beggar-a wandering vagrant. Buddha achieved world-wide and time-long distinction of character by the utter relinquishment and abandonment of the vanities with which we surround ourselves. They both agree in one thing, that instead of imagining life to be fulfilled in getting all, they unstintedly gave all and attained the peace that passed all understanding by so doing. Civilisation is running itself into a cul-de-sac. The real value is in and of life itself. The infinite is infinite here and now, or nowhere and nowhen. Self-culture and development offer an endless scope for our activity. The deepening and intensification of our own consciousness, the mellowing and refining of our inherent selves, the pressing inward to the essential divinity that resides within-these are the great satisfying and peace-assuring things. Even on the bare utilitarian ground they justify themselves. It is notorious that the periods of nations' utmost efficiency and vitality have been coincident with the seasons when they have been cultivating and expressing the more inward things. Greece flourished while she was writing her poetry. Rome was sound while she was formulating her law. The Hebrew who spoke and thought in terms of soul is to this day, although without a single square inch of national territory, racially inextinguishable. L is the sense of soul in a people that ultimately saves it-the consciousness of an integrity that rests, not upon maisrial props, but upon invisible and eternal foundations.

And one can hope that this war will do something to reveal to Europe the wrongness of her method, unveil the toe we have been harbouring in our boso; is, and by the spectacle and experience of sheer exhaustion turn us inward to the real sources of power and being. It may be that we shall have to be taught by this stern process of decimation -see our glories smitten to the dust and the things we cherished annihilated. And when the battle smoke has all drifted away, and the poor sodden and ravaged earth has entombed our squandered material splendour, there may dawn a day in which we shall come to ourselves and start afresh to build Jerusalem in a fair and pleasant land. We shall, perchance, have learnt to leave behind our workable avarice, our disastrous pride, our deluding lusts and vanities, our impossible appetites, our unredoomed ambitions, and in sweeter simpler, sublimer ways, go on to breed a race that shall make the principle of broa therhood not only a name but a living

ONE HAPPY HOME.

"John, I'm so happy." "Are you, dear? I'm glad to hear that. You ought to be happy. You have everything to make you so." "Mrs Wilkinson was here this afternoon and she said baby looked so much like me that no one would believe you were any relation to it."

HANDED DOWN.

A rather pompous general, in full dress, came suddenly upon a newly enlisted bugler, who failed to salute.

The general reported the grave offence to the colonel, with the order that the boy be severely reprimanded. The colonel passed the order on to the captain, who told the bugle-major. The latter told the corporal bugler, and he had the offender brought before him.

"See here, youngster," he said, "if you don't salute old Poker-back next time you meet him, you'll git a clout in the hear'-

"Although he overcharged me terribly," said the returned traveller, "the cab driver who took me over Paris was most polite."

"All Frenchmen are," his friend replied.

"Yes, but this one got off his box and helped me to find the necessary language in my French-English dictionary so that I might say what I thought of him."

In a poor little cottage the curate found a married couple with many children. Hearing a baby cry, he asked to see it, explaining that he was interested in babies, having one of his own at home.

The infant was introduced for inspection, and the mother asked proudly: "Is your's as big as that, sir?" To which he replied: "I think it is a little bigger."

Instantly the maternal instincts were up in arms, and tossing her head, she said: "So well it might be; that's only half our's. We had twins!"

It was in a very evangelistic district of Wales that the countryside was defaced on every available spot with scriptural texts and would-be heart-searching questions. On the flat stonework of a bridge, in huge letters, appeared the soul-racking query: "What will you do when you die?"

But it was not so unanswerable as the writer hoped, for an enterprising bagman in the chemist line wrote underneath in letters of equal size: "Use Dash's Cold Cream-it's good for burns."

"It was a moment of intense excite-ment," Solly Dirtyberg declared. "There vas I-in the biggest showroom at the Big Store—ven, vithout vord of varin' the whole of the electric light goes out; the whole place is as black at Sheol!" "Und vot did you get?" asked Shik-kerstein, eagerly. "Accha Nebbish! groaned Dirtyberg.

"I vas in der grand pianner department."
