PARIS LEAVE—SUMMER '18.

When the big stuff starts to drop
And machine-gun bullets pop, Till the front seems just like hell for all concerned;

When waist-deep in mud you plead
With the pair of mules you lead, Ere you turn on all the adjectives you've learned.

When your pack just makes you howl
Till you guess you'll "sky the towel,"
Go and draw your final kit at Peter's store;

Change your khaki clothes and things
For a halo and some wings
In a land where diggers' feet are never sore.

Don't forget that there's a chance
Of a wonder leave in France—
Leave that makes a fellow get to feeling "bon."

Where you get the happy hand
And are taught to understand Just the reason why the French are boxing on.

Get the oil from one who's been,
Take the tip from one who's seen,
Paree leave's the tired soldier's only bet;

All the folks are bright and gay,
All your troubles fade away;
It's the nearest thing to Heaven that you'll get.

There are cafes by the score,
With an ever-open door;
You can pull on pints and watch the People pass

'Neath the awning and the trees,
Where the waiters get the wheeze,
For they always see there's something in your glass.

Oh! the steaks and pomme de terre
Simply make you cease to care,
In the restaurants along the boulevard.
There's no preference for ranks,
If you've only got the francs
You will find there's absolutely nothing barred.

They will take you by the hand,
Show you through their wonderland,
All the glories past and present you will see.

With a bunch of "jolie filles"
You will soon be quite at ease,
Though your knowledge of the language ends at "oui."

Should there ever come a time
When the Diggers in the line Chance to find their fighting spirit on the wane;

If the M.O. knows his job
He will order that the mob Shall go out to rest at Paree on the Seine.
