TRY SMILING.

(By C. Baker, in "N.Z. at the Front").

When the rations come up short
And you don't get half you ought,
It's no use to raise a strafe;
That won't bring the other half—
Try smiling.

If your dinner you've begun,
And your playful friend the Han
Drops a "sausage" on your plate,
Do not sing the Hymn of Hate—
Try smiling.

When you get the blooming hump
Carrying sandbags to the dump,
And to make things rather worse
It comes on to rain, don't curse—
Try smiling.

When you go before the "quack,"
Having pains across your back,
And he orders "Number Nine,"
It is little use to whine—
Try smiling.

When you feel as if the war
Would go on for evermore,
Just remember that it can't;
Then make up your mind it shan't—
Try smiling.

THE PROFITEER.

"Over the top, with the best of luck!"
Sitting at home you "admire" his pluck,
You do not know him, nor do you care
So long as you've your easy chair.

"What are yer fighting for?" Don't ask me—
Ask that blighter there that you see
With his patent leathers, his fat cigar,
Plenty to eat, and an easy chair.

What does he care, with his big account
Drawn from the blood of the boys that mount
The parapet there in the dawning light?
His only use is for them to fight."

"Over the top and—"Now, play the game;
Come over with us, or share the shame
Of the bloke on the gate, who doesn't care
So long as it's lager and easy chair.
